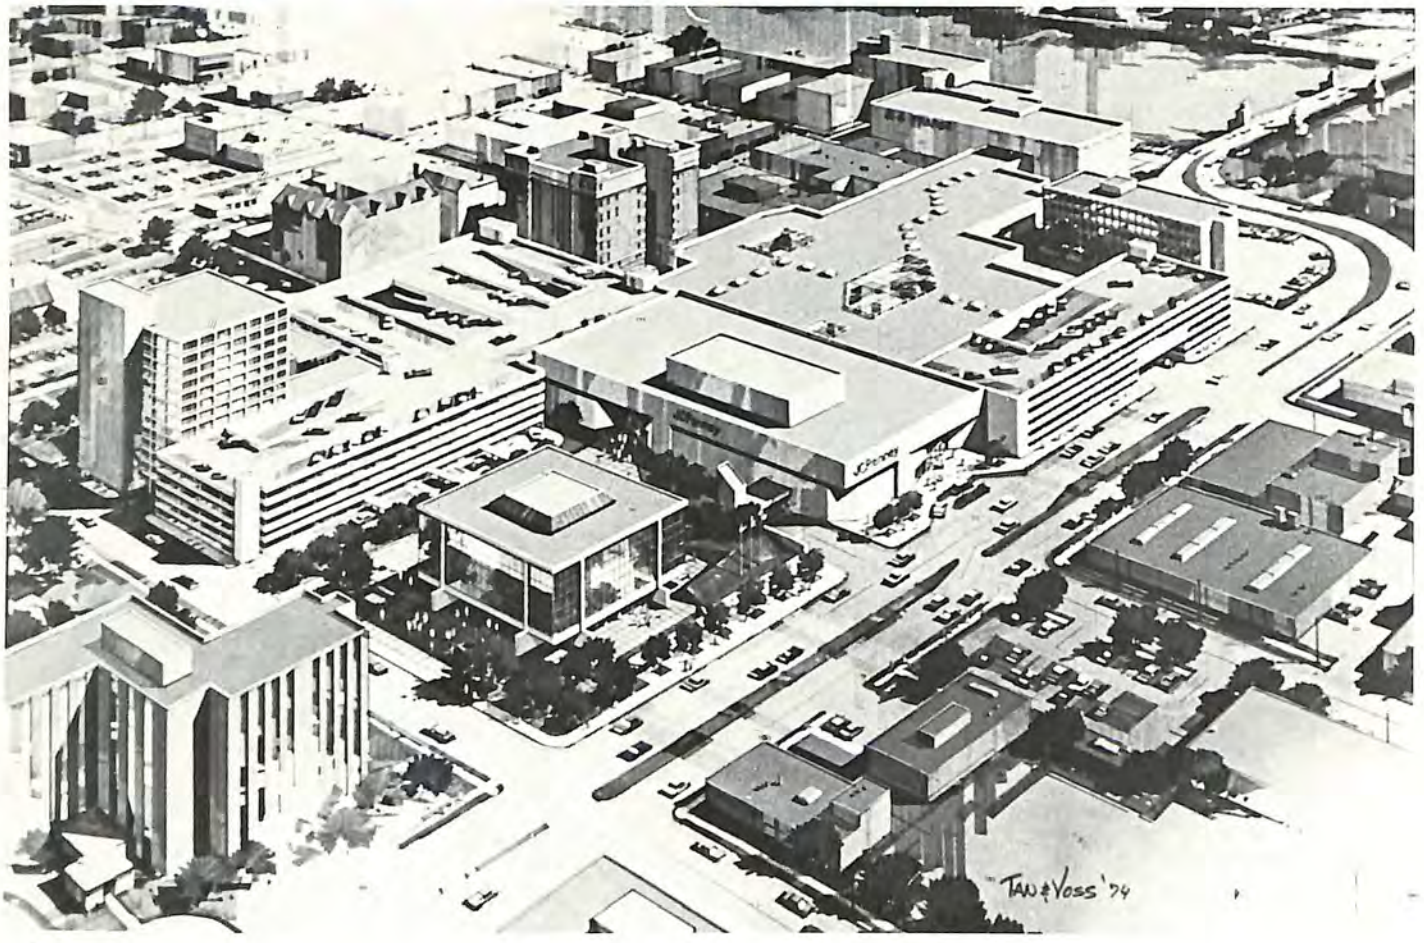
Another Partnership Success



The Port Plaza Mall is turning the attention of Wisconsin to downtown Green Bay. This sprawling shopping complex, with its potential of 775,000 square feet of selling space, will make the Mall the largest shopping center in northern Wisconsin.

The $35,000,000 project was built with shopper convenience in mind, a fact that is underlined by its more than 2,700 parking places in three covered ramps.

We are proud of our part in the financing, planning and support of the Port Plaza Mall. For more than 100 years, Kellogg's has been an eager working partner in the growth of the Green Bay business community.

Within Family

By Art Daley
Editor, Green Bay Packer Yearbook

Olde Yearbookee proverb:

Competition within family makes family highly competitive outside family.

It isn't exactly a fixture in the Chinese book of pithy sayings . . . but it fits the Green Bay Packers in this Year of 1977.

With a great loss of top draft choices the past two years due to previous trades, Coach Bart Starr was hard pressed to provide razor-sharp competition for positions on his team.

Now, with the Packers' first full draftnot to mention trades and the signing of some key free agents, Starr approaches the 1977 campaign with more good people fighting for the various jobs.

This is bound to improve the Packers' performance once the final cuts are made and the team takes to the NFL's fast track.

Starr, in his first two seasons at the Packer helm, has succeeded in restoring leadership and unity in the Packer family - plus a positive attitude . . . despite a 4-10 record in 1975 and 5-9 in '76.

Enter competition . . . Starr, in analyzing the Packers before training camp opened, pin-pointed the competition theory this way:

"In looking at our depth chart, you can quickly see that if our injured people return healthy and can perform well, and some of our draft choices can come through for us, we can have a very competitive situation for the first time in the three years we've been here.

"I would like to point out that no one on this football team is given a job. He must earn it. And I can assure our new people that none of our veterans is going to relinquish his job without a fight. That's why I think we're going to have some good competition."

The Packer defensive unit, which finished eighth in the National Football Conference in '76, is being given the chief competitive nudge.

This was made possible in the college player draft, in which the Packers selected defensive standouts as their two first round picks - Mike Butler and Ezra Johnson, both defensive ends.

These two will produce exceptional competition for the starting end positions in the Pack's Front Four, the backbone of the club's defense. The Pack's primary aim is to provide an effective pass rush, not one of Green Bay's strong suits the past few years.

Butler and Johnson will be battling and pushing holdovers Clarence Williams, Alden Roche and Bob Barber.

Inside the Packers have good variety in Mike P. McCoy, Dave Pureifory and Dave Roller. All three have different styles and could be helped tremendously if play at the flanks improve.

The Packers didn't draft a linebacker but there'll be a big plus with the return of Jim Carter, an eight-year veteran who is sick and tired of injuries. He'll challenge Don Hansen at the critical middle spot. The outside spots are in good hands with Fred Carr and Gary Weaver.

The secondary suffered a loss with the trade of Perry Smith but this unit is blessed with a group of hard workers. Sophomore Mike C. McCoy figures to step into Smith's shoes at the right corner and he'll join left corner Willie Buchanon and the "hit" boys at safety - Steve Luke and Johnnie Gray. The big competition here will be provided by Steve Wagner, the former Wisconsin star, who looked so good at times after the Packers acquired him from New England during the '76 season.

Offensively, the major competition will be served up at quarterback and wide receiver.

While Lynn Dickey rates as the Packers' No. 1 quarterback, he'll have a veteran of 10 NFL seasons behind him. That would be Randy Johnson, who was obtained as a free agent in '76 after Dickey went down with an injury in the 10th game. Johnson led the Packers to their fifth victory in the windup at Atlanta.

Johnson provides Starr with added experience at QB in case of emergency - not to mention competition. Joining this pair will be strong-armed Carlos Brown, who will be in his third year.

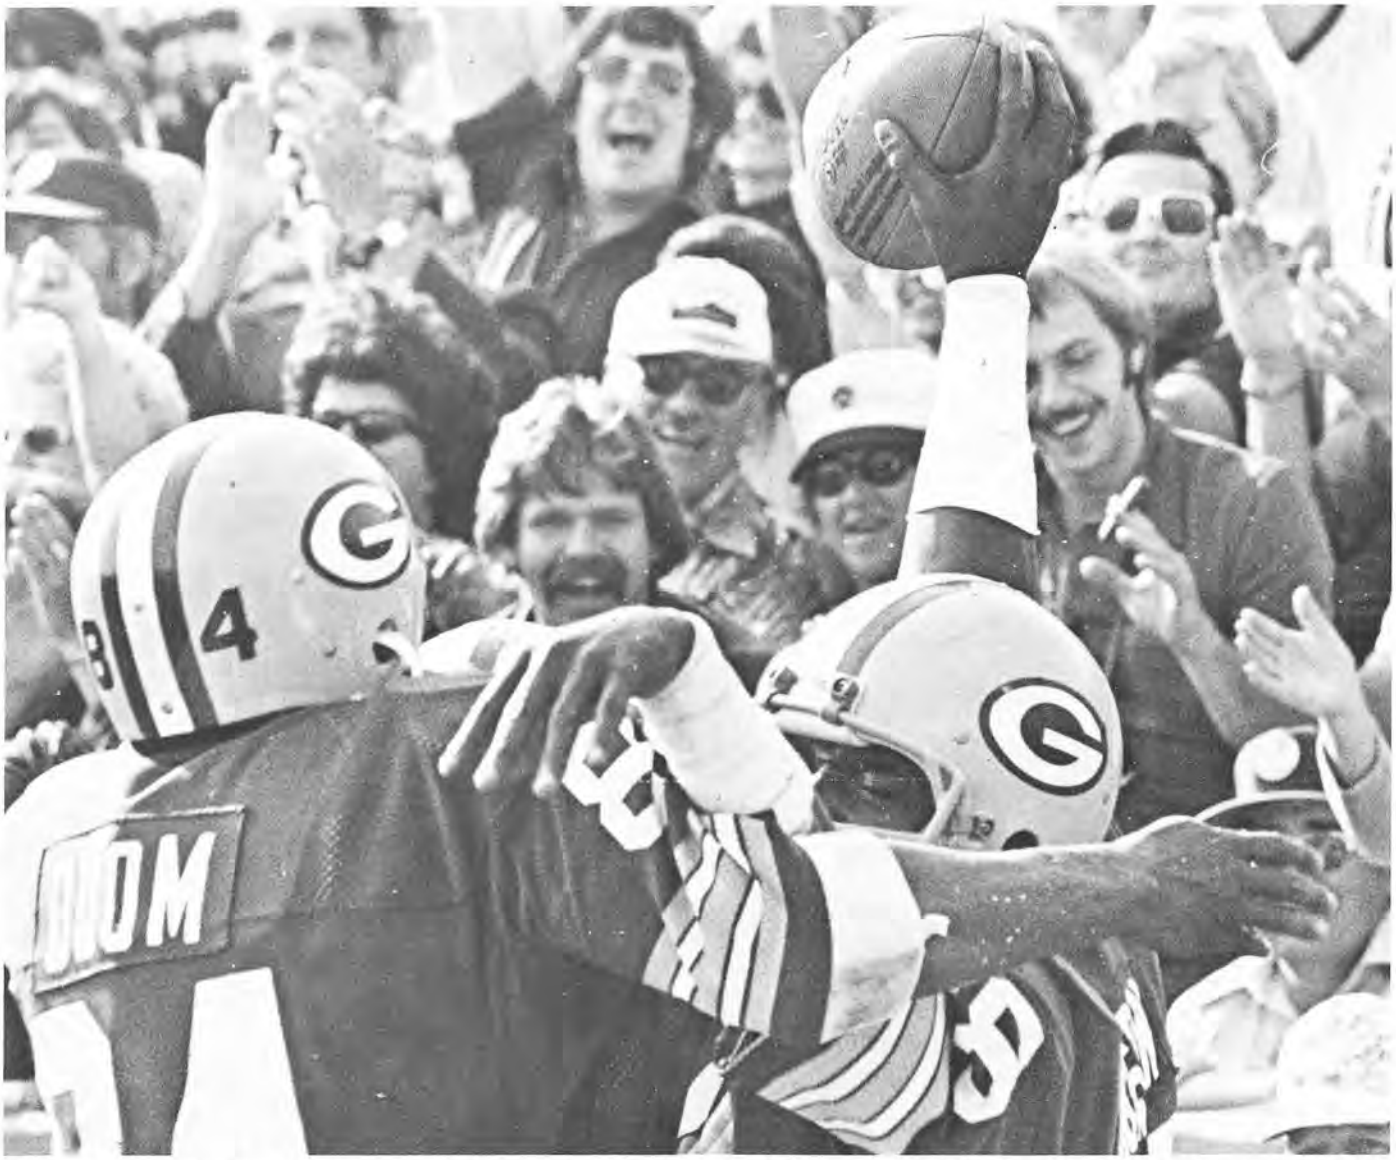
Improvement in the Pack's offense will have to start at quarterback and there is plenty of room for that. The offense finished 13th in over-all offense in the NFL last year.

Exceptional competition will take place at wide receiver, even though no WR's were drafted. Challenging holdovers Ken Payne, Steve Odom and Ollie Smith will be three from the injured reserve - Gerald Tinker, Aundra Thompson and Jessie Green.

Payne dropped considerably from his 58-catch 1975 season but Smith came along strong late in the '76 drive. Tinker, a legitimate 9.1 sprinter, could give the Packers a much-needed deep threat. Starr feels Thompson has considerable potential.

Success of the rushing game, 12th in the NFC in '76, is based largely on a return to form by veteran fullback John Brockington. Big John had a strong finish in the 14th game at Atlanta, gaining 89 yards, after replacing injured Barty Smith late in the season.

Brock and Smith should provide the big punch. Coming off the injured list will be Cliff Taylor, who showed a lot of promise last year - plus holdovers Willard Harrell and Eric



The joy of a touchdown. . .Fans whoop it up as Steve Odom hugs Bert Askson after Askson caught TD pass from Lynn Dickey to put Packers ahead of Lions 17-14 in Green Bay Oct. 3. Green Bay won 24-14 for first victory of 1976.

Torkelson. The chief competition could come from good rookie prospects Terdell Middleton and Dave Shepard - plus a few free agents.

The Packers' rushing game is so vital because it may determine the success of the aerial attack. The Packers, unable to gain consistently on the ground last year, were often faced with second and long situations, thus enabling defenses to sit back and wait for the pass.

The front line, of course, provides the key to the Pack's offensive improvement. Starr made offensive linemen two of his first picks and five of his 12 selections overall, with the chief hopes being Greg Koch, Rick Scribner, Rell Tipton and Derrel Gofourth.

Sophomore Mel Jackson will get first chance at replacing all-pro Gale Gillingham. Also returning are Dick Himes, Larry McCarren, Bruce Van Dyke, Bob Hyland, Steve Knutson and the top choice a year ago, Mark Koncar. Mark improved as the '76 season progressed and he is expected to be better this year.

The offensive line will have a new coach, one Bill Curry, the former Packer center and a three-time Super Bowl performer, who has vowed to make his unit more proficient and competitive.

The entire offense may have a new look and/or different approach this season due to a major shift in coaching. The offensive coordinator of the last two years, Paul Roach, has departed and Starr, himself, will become more closely involved with the operation of the offense. He will serve as his own offensive coordinator.

In another change, Bob Lord will shift from special teams coach to offensive backfield coach and Burt Gustafson will become coach of the special teams. Incidentially, the special teams did exceptionally well a year ago, leading the league in punt coverage and ranking second in kickoff coverage.

The Packers' two "foot" people - Chester Marcol and Dave Beverly, are both counted on to improve in '77. Marcol, sidelined in '75 by injury, kicked only 10 field goads in 19 attempts last year, his poorest showing. Beverly delivered a Packer record 84 punts in '76 but his net average was down to 32.2 yards.

And there you have the Packer picture as of the Summer of '77. It's a brighter picture and the added competition could produce a marked improvement over 1976.

Bart Starr and The Art of Concentration

By Lee Remmel
Green Bay Packer Publicity Director

By almost any definition, "The Art of Concentration" would qualify as a serious subject. But, serious or not, it evoked a throaty chuckle from Bart Starr, pondering this weighty topic in the privacy of his functional, dark-paneled office on Lombardi Avenue.

The cause of his merriment soon became manifest. Leaning back in the commodious swivel chair which commands his impeccably ordered inner sanctum, the youthful Packer coach began to divulge a domestic confidence.

"Cherry gets upset on occasion with me," he began, "because I'll be reading or watching television and zero in on it to the degree that, when she says something, I will acknowledge it and never hear her.

"She will come back and repeat it, trying to catch me. She knows I'm not listening to her and thus plays a little game with me. Actually, she's very tolerant because I'm not aware of this habit."

As Bryan Bartlett Starr had suggested, such bemused concentration on his part is old hat to the petite brunette who has presided over his household with grace and good humor for the last two decades. But his assistant coaches have been exposed to this Starr trait only in the last two years, and they clearly are still in awe of his cerebral staying power.

This, in large part, is because they have encountered it in much fuller measure than the lady of the house has. The head coach's power of concentration is displayed for them almost every working day in the depths of the coaches' conference room — at exhausting length and with clocklike regularity. And, during the season, on a morning, afternoon and evening basis.

Though now an accepted part of the daily office routine, such protracted exercises in cerebration never fail to impress Dick Corrick, the Packers' diminutive and forthright director of pro player personnel.

"The Coach never tires out," he moans, shaking his blond head in disbelief. "He can sit in the meeting room looking at film all day and all night long, first with the offensive coaches and then with the defense, without tiring.

"If he didn't have to take a bathroom break now and then," Corrick noted with a wry grin, "I think they'd be in there indefinitely. He has a great ability to hone in on something and really work it. He never runs down.

"And even if two or three people are talking at once, he never loses the subject of discussion. He always seems to be able to filter it all down and get back to the original subject. But I think the impressive thing about him is the length of time he can concentrate on a given subject — just take something and stay on it indefinitely."

Starr, however, evinced surprise over the reaction his attention span has occasioned around Packer headquarters. He also took mild exception to the suggestion he "never runs down," in the process of making a candid, question-answer analysis of what this mental discipline has meant to him as both a player and coach, and how vital the related skills of organization and communication are to function and fulfillment in his dual role as head coach and general manager.

"I don't know about never tiring," said Starr in launching his typically meticulous appraisal. "Perhaps I just conceal it. I think the ability to concentrate is one of the keys to success in any business. We talk to our players constantly about the need to concentrate. When you lose that capacity, you tend to err, and I think the lack of proper conditioning tends to force you to lose your concentration. You begin thinking about how tired you are, for example. Then, as a result, you'll err because your mind is not channeled and not geared to be thinking about what it should be. As I said, you're more concerned with your physical state than you are with the assignment. I try to concentrate as hard as I can on the task at hand, but other than that I haven't given it too much thought."

This, apparently, is something you disciplined yourself and your mind to do?

"Tried to, yes."

Do you remember when you first began to develop this faculty?

"I don't . . . except that from a football standpoint, I suppose it would have gone back to my early days of training in high school.

"I was privileged to play for a fine high school coach. I know our system certainly was not that complicated, but it was challenging. We were using a system very similar to what the University of Kentucky was and, I guess, for a high school team to be doing that, you had to work at it. I can remember spending some lengthy hours mastering the system . . . I suppose it started then."

Did you ever take any courses to help you develop your concentration?

"No, I have not."

Have you read any books that helped you in this area?

"I like to read as much as I can — what I would label current reading material. I don't read a lot of novels. I did at one time enjoy reading many history books. I minored in history in college, and I really enjoyed reading various accounts of history, from world history to United States history and even to Civil War history which I had a keen interest in, coming from the South. But through the years, I began to drift away from that kind of reading and would zero in on what I would call magazine articles which deal with management, current subjects and issues or self-improvement ideas. From those, any which I run across that I feel are particularly intereting, I try to save and re-read. I guess through the years you read some which you feel will help you in business and in management to the degree that you want to retain something from them. We try to expose such information to our people around the office because I think that regardless of your field, you can learn from someone else . . . There may be a tip in one of these which would increase your motivation, or tell you how to budget your time more effectively, etc. So any time I run across an article like that, I not only like to read it, I like to share it with everybody else in the building."

Bart flashes victory smile after Packers beat Saints in Milwaukee Nov. 7.

This ability to concentrate had to help you as a quarterback?

"Yes it did. I think it's critical for a quarterback to try to develop that ability. If he tends to let something break his concentration, then the results are going to be quite obvious. Your quarterback must constantly work at not letting anything interfere with his chain of thought or concentration.

"I think it's something that you do work at, and I can recall working very hard here under Coach Lombardi because I wanted so much to suceed. I had not done anything since I had been in college, I hadn't been sucessful. And I knew deep down inside that I could win, and had the ability to lead, and yet I wasn't doing it. So, as he came in and things began to change, I wanted to make every effort that I could to be part of that change for the good."

Do you feel this ability to concentrate also has helped you as a coach?

"Yes, because I have so many things to learn as a coach that you've really got to give your full and complete attention to each subject or area. In order to do that, a strong power of concentration is helpful."

Do you have any idea how long you can apply that "power of concentration" in a stretch (in the film room, for example)?

"I think it depends on a number of factors. What time of the day it is, how fresh you are, the subject matter you're studying. There are some things which are simply more interesting than others. Some discussions we have in staff meetings become very stimulating. And thus your concentration continues to peak.

You've trained yourself to speak off-the-cuff with extraordinary skill. How did you accomplish this, and is it again a matter of concentration?

"I think there are times when your mind just functions better, and you feel more alive in your ability to express yourself. Then there are some days I sit here, during an interview, and grope for the appropriate words. Some days you're simply sharper than others. I know there are some days when I meet with the press and feel more confident about what I want to say at that particular time. There are also some days I would like to skip the session."

You seem particularly effective in public appearances. Is there some technique you practiced to develop this skill?

"Experience is a big factor. However, any time I'm going to give a major speech or address I have butterflies before I begin. I've never regarded this as anything to be concerned with but rather looked upon it as the body's way of getting you primed to give your best effort.

"When I speak, I enjoy listening to what has preceded my remarks, and I try to get a little bit of feel of the atmosphere. Many times someone will say something which will give you a perfect lead-in to further personalize your comments."

You have mentioned in the past that you admired Ray Scott's ability to speak extemporaneously, and I have noticed you seldom use notes yourself when delivering a talk.

"Except for special occasions such as stockholders' meetings, team meetings, etc., I prefer not to use notes. Anytime you can create an atmosphere with the audience that's more conducive to conversation as opposed to lecturing, I feel everyone benefits more."

I assume you feel this quality, to be articulate, is an important asset to have as a head coach?

"Yes, I do. I think the ability to relate to your people in an articulate fashion is invaluable. I think it's becoming even more so every year because the days of the big, strong blockhead are gone.

You also are extremely well organized. Have you always been so, or is this something you also developed?

"I've tried to be. I think that's a direct reflection of my military upbringing. For as long as I can remember, I've even hung my pants, shirts and coats a certain way in the closet. I can't stand disorganization. I think you function better if you're organized and disciplined to a commitment. If a person will put some order in his life, establish his priorities, he will get more out of it."

What other qualities would you say a head coach must have?

"The same qualities any other successful head of an organization should possess. You begin with a positive attitude, because everything we are or will be is an extension of our attitude. Additionally, he should be goal oriented, decisive, full of self esteem, willing to delegate authority, understanding and able to communicate well, strong morally, trustworthy, able to respond positively to pressure, able to motivate effectively and have a good sense of humor. I think these are some of the qualities all good leaders identify with."

If you had to rank the qualities you listed, which would you feel is the single most important?

"It would be difficult to say, but I do think it all begins with attitude within the organization. If you look at your winning people through the years — and I'll pick one, Bear Bryant, because I'm very partial to him — if you look at him, I think one of the reasons he has been successful is that he has surrounded himself with good people. I think this is where you start. I think in order to build anything successfully, you do it with good people. This is what we're striving to do here — to get the best people in all our positions throughout the organization.

Getting back to the subject of attention spans, how do you feel your players rank in this regard?

"Well, I think there are some who are better than others, and I think that one of the challenges we have as coaches is to increase that span, because it's easy — after a long day and dinner — to sag during the evening meeting."

Do you find them any different than your teammates of your playing day in this respect?

"Not generally. I think we're basically the same in that respect. As I said, you have some who have the capacity to concentrate a little harder and you have some who don't. Also some have the ability to learn much easier and therefore are a little bit flippant in their attitude toward football classroom work. There's another fact. The older the player, the tougher it is to hold his attention because he has developed his own style of identifying and learning and tends to get bored with the basic fundamentals. Unknowingly, this often can be his undoing."

How about your quarterbacks, specifically - Lynn Dickey, Randy Johnson, Carlos Brown? Do they have good attention spans?

"Yes they do. I haven't been around Randy for that length of time - as you know, he came in late last year - but he is a very bright, attentive person and I know he will show that from the beginning of training camp. I enjoyed working with him last year in the short time he was here because of his attentiveness. He came in and was very, very coachable. I think that's a credit to him. Carlos and Lynn are both attentive and coachable, and they're a pleasure to work with."

Does Dickey remind you at all of yourself at a similar stage?

"As I've told you before, I don't believe in comparisons because we're all ourselves, we're individual. I feel Lynn has a lot of talent, is sound mechanically, is tough mentally and has all the qualities you're seeking in a leader. He needs a lot of work, and a couple of complete seasons under our system to become the total quarterback we feel he can be."

A final question - what do you see ahead for the Coach, Bart Starr?

"I see continued growth. I've learned a lot in the time I have been here. I have a good mind - I have a capacity and willingness to learn, and I just feel I'm going to get better as a coach because I'm willing to work at it. I think that's another key to success in any field - a willingness and a desire to learn. If you have those, and the other ingredients, you can accomplish anything you want to."

Johnnie Gray

. . . An Exceptional Tackler

By Mike Kupper
The Milwaukee Journal

Two years ago, hardly anyone outside his circle of family, friends and especially keen football buffs had heard of Johnnie Gray.

After all, how much fame or notoriety can a guy gain in two years of football at a dash school, in his case California - Fullerton? Gray was such an unknown quantity he didn't even rate as a last round draft choice. He was relegated to that great faceless legion of college free agents, most of whom quickly go on to other pursuits once their lack of pro potential is ascertained.

So what is this guy, this Johnnie Gray, doing as the anchorman in the Packers' defensive backfield?

Doing? Why, he's becoming a secondary sensation, proving to his own satisfaction that a name is not a necessity in pro football, and to the satisfaction of underdog lovers everywhere that hard work can produce something more than a sweat.

All-pro? Not yet, but the day may not be far off when the Packers' free safety has gained that recognition. If and when he does, certainly it will be no surprise to Dick LeBeau, Gray's immediate superior as coach of the Green Bay secondary.

"He definitely is a potential all-pro," LeBeau says, pointing out that in one aspect, at least, he has made it already. "His strength is his tackling," LeBeau says, perhaps belaboring the obvious. Gray got his big chance with the Packers because he showed them early and often that he was a hitter.

Johnnie Gray in Post-Game Interview.

"He is an exceptional tackler," LeBeau says. "There may be two other defensive backs in the league who tackle as well as he, but not any more than two".

The solid tackles he affixes to running backs and receivers thrill Gray, too. "I like it," he says. "It excites me, especially if I'm hitting somebody I've heard a lot about, like Rocky Bleier. I love to give them a pop."

Gray, though, is not a complete defensive back, perhaps because he still is learning. With two full seasons of experience, though, he doesn't have nearly as much to learn now as he did as a free agent rookie starter.

"I'm real pleased with his rate of improvement," says LeBeau. "And I think we're going to see him improve some more. The way he applies himself, he's going to be a real fine football player. He has some technique errors in his pass coverage that we can imporve that will make him even better.

"He makes some errors, but when he makes an error, it's a positive, aggressive mistake. We can correct them and make them work for the team. Lack of effort, mental errors, those are the things that will defeat a football team. Johnnie isn't guilty of those.

Gray admits to having work to do on pass defense, and would especially like to improve his interception total. He did quadruple his rookie production last year, going from one to four, but has bigger things in mind. "Free safeties are supposed to get interceptions," he says. "When I think of free safeties, I think of Paul Krause of the Vikings. I think he had 10 interceptions one year.

"A free safety should lead his team in interceptions (which Gray did in 1976) because he's always around the ball when it's tipped, or when the cornerback and safety are around one receiver, the free safety is usually around to pick off the ball if a pass is broken up or missed."

Determining where the pass is going to be, though, may be the free safety's toughest job. It amounts to a guessing game with the enemy quarterback.

"I have to read the quarterback," he says. "He dictates to me where he's going to throw the ball.

"I have to read him right and try to get there before he gets the ball there. I can gamble more than the cornerback. If the corner lets his eyes off the receiver for a second, he's gone. But I watch the quarterback's eyes."

Gray got a great lesson in quarterback reading as a rookie against Bob Griese and the Miami Dolphins. "I kept watching Griese and he kept looking back at me," Gray recalled. "He'd look at me, and then he'd look around, but he always came back to me. He looked at me all day from all kinds of different alignments. It was sort of like a staredown. Sometimes I'd just walk away if I thought I'd read him right and figured where the ball would be going. I was trying to get a little extra edge."

LeBeau thinks, too, that not only Gray but the entire secondary will have to come up with more interceptions in 1977 than was the case in '76. "Taking all things in consideration, we probably came pretty close to meeting our preseason coverage goals," he said. "Average yards per catch, total passing yardage yielded, total sacks - we were quite productive in those areas. We were in the top half of the conference and the league.

"But there are two areas where we need to improve drastically - percentage of completions allowed, and number of interceptions. We were near the bottom of the league, and that's not acceptable.

"Much of that," LeBeau said, was traceable to inexperience. "We're a young team in the secondary, he said. "Interceptions generally come from being in the right position, and the more experience you have, the more likely you are to be in the right position."

Last year, only cornerback Willie Buchanon had more than a season's worth of experience, and he was coming off a broken leg that had sidelined him in the second game of the 1975 season. Gray had a year's experience, and so did Perry Smith, the other cornerback, but strong safety Steve Luke was operating pretty much on special teams experience he had gained his rookie year, and learning as he played.

And the Packers will be young again in the secondary this season, with second year man M. C. McCoy replacing Smith, who was traded Mike C. McCoy could make dramatic improvement in 1977.

Johnnie Gray makes first interception and then runs 15 yards for first touchdown of 1976 season against Forty-Niners in Green Bay, Sept. 12.

when he and the Packers could not agree on his worth.

Because Smith was hurt several times, the young McCoy did get considerable experience, although, as LeBeau says, he has a ways to go. "I feel, though, that he's going to be a fine defensive back," LeBeau said. "He has excellent acceleration, he's aggressive and attentive. I think we're going to see dramatic improvement in his play the next couple of seasons."

LeBeau, in fact, is counting on normal improvement all around the secondary. Buchanon, he says, will be closer to the form that made him an all-pro as a rookie. Luke, the defensive surprise of '76, figures to be better with his year's experience, and will have Steve Wagner pushing him for a job.

"Between the two Steves, we've got two strong young safeties," he said. "Luke will be the starter as long as he can hold the job, but Wagner was handicapped by coming in late last season. We think a training camp with us will do him a world of good. We've got two people for that spot who are aggressive, and that's nice."

Charley Hall figures to be the main backup anywhere around the secondary, a traditional role for the seven-year veteran.

If either of secondary draftees, Tim Moresco of Syracuse or Willie Randolph of American International, proves himself a hitter, though, one of them could be in the running for bigger things with the Packers. Gray may not need much improvement in that area, but he is an exception, LeBeau said.

"Our tackling last year was not at a level that Green Bay defense requires," he said. "We need to improve that area, too."

Lambeau Field and the usual sellout.

Lambeau Field

20 Years Later

By Don Langenkamp
Green Bay Press-Gazette

There are no elaborate boxes decorated with a French Provincial decor at Green Bay's Lambeau Field.

There is no dome over its head.

The field is covered with lush grass instead of sometimes unfriendly artificial turf.

Oh yes, there is one other item lacking at the home of the Green Bay Packers that many other National Football League stadiums have . . . red ink.

It may seem like only yesterday to venerable Packer fans when Lambeau Field - then called City Stadium - was dedicated on Sept. 29, 1957 amid hoopla and celebrities.

But 20 years have passed by, and the bond issue for $960,000 in principal and an additional $306,000 in interest for the original facility was paid in full on March 1, 1977.

That adds another dimension to the uniqueness of the Packer facility - one of many ways Lambeau Field is different from its sister stadiums around the league.

The spanking new concrete-and-steel stadium was widely hailed as one of the two or three best in the NFL when it was completed. It was the first facility ever built exclusively for professional football use.

It was built at what today is an unheard of bargain-basement price. And it has taken on a rich aura of tradition during its two decades.

After 20 years, the facility remains one of the best in the league. Every one of the 56,267 seats in Lambeau Field offers a clear, unobstructed view of the playing field. Unlike some other facilities, fans sitting in the top rows don't have to feel like they are watching the action from the Goodyear blimp.

In contrast, the Washington Redskins, with a lower capacity of 55,004, now sell a number of "limited-view" seats . . . selling for $1 more than what you pay for a 50-yard line vantage point in the home of the Packers.

The original capacity of Lambeau Field was 32,168 and since then it has nearly doubled. With the arrival of Vince Lombardi and nearly unbroken success in 1959, an insistent clamor for more seats began.

In 1961, the south corners of the open-end stadium were filled in, adding 6,458 seats. The capacity was raised again two years later to 42,327 seats when the north corners were filled in - on the heels of two straight championships.

The new seats found happy occupants, and still the demand was not satisfied. In 1965, the largest addition was implemented when the entire south end was filled in with 8,534 seats, raising the total to 50,861.

Finally, in 1970, the north end zone was filled to make Lambeau Field the handsome, complete bowl it is today with its capacity of 56,267.

Green Bay taxpayers footed the bill for the original stadium construction in 1957 after passing a referendum the previous year by a thumping 11,575 to 4,893 margin.

The Packers have paid for each improvement since then, which also includes construction of an administration building that has twice-been expanded - most recently this year.

Two major improvements have been made to the stadium in the past three years. The new, larger scoreboard on the south end with the capability of flashing information to the fans was a donation of Pabst Brewing Co. three years ago.

A year later, Coach Bart Starr's first season, the visiting team was housed in a new dressing room on the south end of the stadium, marking the first time that the combatants took the field of play from opposite ends.

Total cost? In the neighborhood of $3.5 million, which pales in comparison with some of the elaborate - but no more functional - edifices built in the past decade.

Bare-bones financial figures only begin to tell the story of Lambeau Field, however. It is on the field where a stadium gets its character and it is here that the Packer house truly became a home.

The new stadium on Green Bay's West Side got a grand sendoff on a sunny September weekend in 1957. Green Bay abounded with celebrities, including then Vice-President Richard M. Nixon; James (Gunsmoke) Arness of television fame; the reigning Miss America, Marilyn Van Der Bur; and the late NFL commissioner, Bert Bell.

All available lodging within a 30-mile radius was jammed. The old wooden stadium on the East side was given a fond farewell on Friday. On Saturday, there was a dedication parade with an estimated throng of 80,000 onlookers.

The on-field tradition was launched the next afternoon. The fired-up Packers surprised the archrival Chicago Bears 21-17 behind one of Babe Parilli's top performances as an NFL quarterback.

But consistent success did not come about until Lombardi arrived. He launched a decade of unparalleled prosperity with a 9-6 win over the Bears in the 1959 home opener. And from that day until the present, there has not been an unsold seat for a regular season game in Lambeau Field.

The Packers went on to win all four of their Lambeau Field games in 1959. During Lombardi's tenure, the team never dipped under .500 and it won at least three of the four games in seven of those nine years, including three clean sweeps.

Lombardi's teams posted a 28-7-1 Lambeau Field mark in regular season games, contributing mightily to the current overall stadium record of 46-30-3 for league games. But even more memorable is the unblemished 4-0 record in playoff games.

The first taste of home-brewed championship success savored by Packer fans came in 1961, when Green Bay handed the New York Giants a 37-0 pasting as Paul Hornung, on leave from the U.S. Army, rang up 19 points to lead the Pack before a record crowd of 39,029.

There was almost an anti-climatic air about the Pack's next NFL championship win in Lambeau Field . . . only because it came right after the Western Division win over the Baltimore Colts on Dec. 26, 1965.

When placekicker Don Chandler booted the deciding field goal after 13:39 of the "fifth quarter" in a sudden death game, it ended the lengthiest battle the NFL had ever seen at that time.

A week later, the Packers launched their drive toward what would eventually wind up as an unprecedented three straight NFL championships. They downed the Cleveland Browns 23-12 and once again Hornung, along with running mate Jim Taylor, played a major role.

Finally, there was the fabled Ice Bowl on Dec. 31, 1967.

Even the most minute details of that pulsating 21-17 win over the Dallas Cowboys for a third straight NFL crown have been recounted time and again. The 13-below-zero weather failed to deep Packer fanatics close to home and hearth that day - a day that is certainly the most storied in Lambeau Field's lore.

All but two of the Packers' eight head coaches have prowled Lambeau Field's sidelines. Only the club's founder, Earl (Curly) Lambeau and his successor, Gene Ronzani, finished out their careers at old City Stadium.

Lisle Blackbourn was the stadium's first occupant, followed by Ray (Scooter) McLean, Lombardi, Phil Bengtson, Dan Devine and now Starr.

A total of 111 games, including 79 league, 28 pre-season and four championship, were played in Lambeau Field in the 20 years, for a record of 68 wins, 39 losses and four ties for .635. The total attendance has reached 5,299,090 - an average of 47,738.

Lambeau died on June 1, 1965, and it took the Green Bay City Council just months to change City Stadium to Lambeau Field.

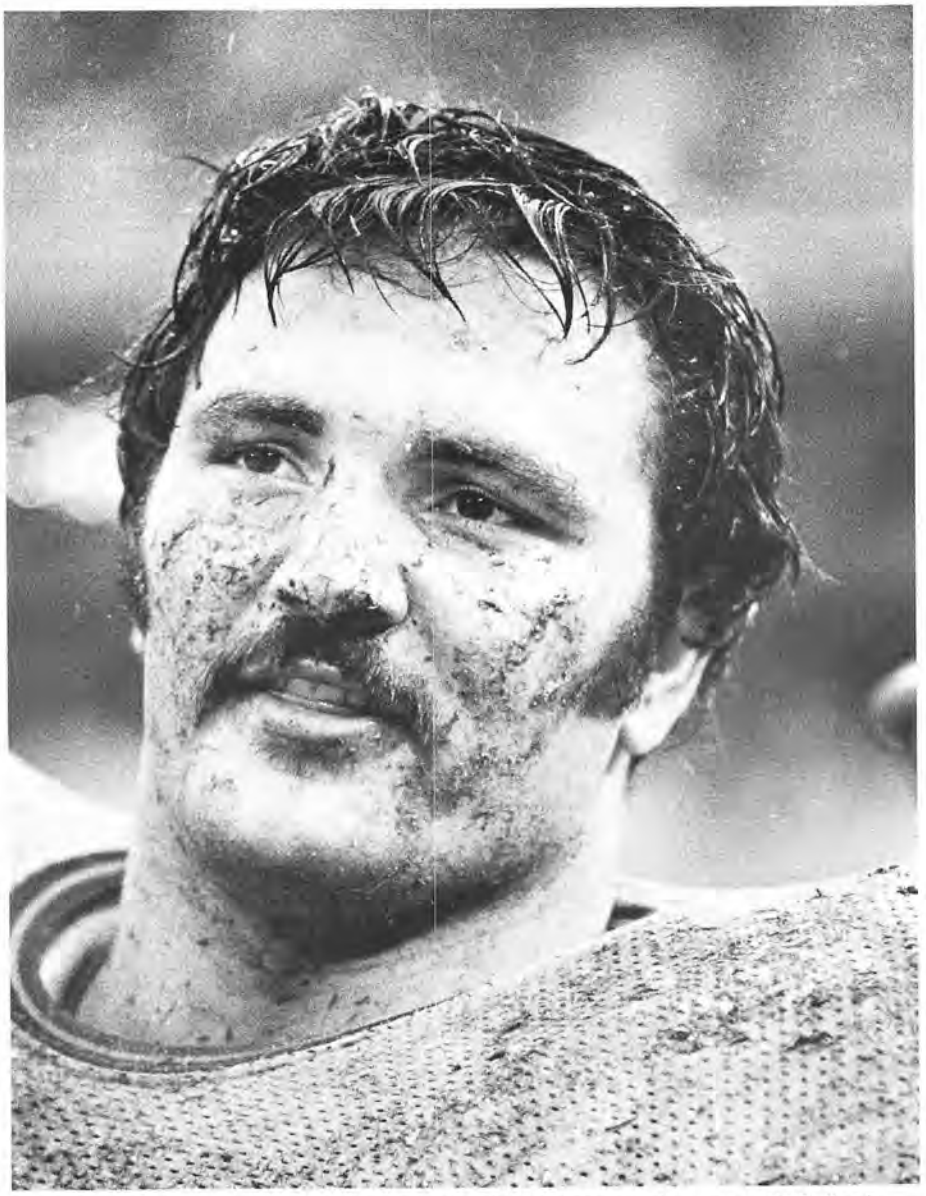
Lambeau Field's future?

Thus far, a dome appears to be well into the future. Seat expansion would require construction of an upper deck.

But whatever future changes are made, there is one constant truism: Lambeau Field is by far the biggest dollar-for-dollar bargain in the league.

And there is no red ink.

Mark Koncar . . . Remains The Hub



Mark Koncar looks pleased and muddy after victory in Atlanta in 1976 final.

By Len Wagner
Green Bay Press-Gazette

Sure action speaks louder than words.

But sometimes non-action does, too.

Even when the words are bouquets like "outstanding . . . great . . . best."

Such was the case of the Packers and Mark Koncar.

As the 1976 season took another pre-playoff dive into history, Koncar appeared to be one of the Packers' bright hopes of 1977.

The burly offensive tackle had performed notably in his rookie year. He displayed all the symptoms of a budding all-pro.

"He's the best looking young lineman I've seen come into the league since I've been in it," said teammate Gale Gillingham, who knows from plenty of personal experience what ingredients are required of an NFL star.

The Packer coaches, while not prepared to underline Gillingham's declaration, were impressed. Even satisfied.

Their satisfaction was expressed not so much in words as in their non-action when the draft finally rolled around in early May.

The Packer offense at times rated around .5 on a scale of 1 to 10 in 1976. And much of the difficulty was traced to the battered offensive line, a mish-mash of once shining stars now dulled by aches and age, journeymen veterans and young hopefuls bartering mostly freshness against experience.

Statistically, this grab bag line fronted a backfield of similar components to finish 26th among the 28 teams in the league.

Bill Curry, the Packers' new line coach, put a lot of off-season hours studying films and concluded, not surprisingly, "There were some very difficult days. It doesn't take a football scholar to see that."

Thus, the early betting on the Packer draft was for an offensive lineman. Oh, there were other areas that also needed considerably shoring up, but the offensive line seemed to be No. 1 from the bottom on the Packer's strength chart.

But when the Pack picked, the pickee was a defensive end. And when the Packers picked again in the first round, thanks to final payment from Oakland for Ted Hendricks, it was again a defense end.

In the second round, the Packers did go for an offensive lineman, Arkansas tackle Greg Koch. But they immediately tabbed him for a guard position in pro ball. In the third round, they plucked another offensive lineman, but again it was a guard, Rick Scribner of Idaho State. In all, the Packers selected five offensive linemen, but only one of them was a legitimate tackle, ninth round pick Joel Mullins of Arkansas State.

A simple significance can be read into this. Mark Koncar is solid in his left tackle position. If the Packers had any concern about his ability to man that post this year and for years to come, they certainly would have gone more heavily into the tackle market.

Their non-action in this regard served as a hefty vote of confidence for the young man out of Colorado. There is little question but that he will serve as the foundation on which the Packer line will be rebuilt.

Just what bricks will be used in the construction of the line alongside Koncar remain questionable. Gillingham is the only regular not back from 1976, having retired for the second time in three years. Dick Himes is a 10-year veteran at right tackle and Bruce Van Dyke is an 11-year veteran at left guard. Center Larry McCarren is the other relative youngster of the group, entering his fifth year. Tight end Rich McGeorge, an 8-year veteran is generally recognized as the quality piece of the blocking brigade. And guard Mel Jackson is considered a potential starter.

The rebuilding was to have begun last year with the infusion of Koncar next to Bill Bain, a promising pro sophomore. Bain, however, clashed with his coaches and asked to be traded, a request Coach Bart Starr agreed to, thereby saving some harmony on the team but possibly setting back one position another year.

Curry takes the Bart Starr-inspired positive approach. He insists there is enough of a nucleus to go along with some promising draft choices to build a decent unit.

"I believe the veterans when they tell me they're sick and tired of losing . . . and not only losing, but taking the brunt of the criticism," he says.

Much of Curry's optimism stems from the final game of last year, the 24-20 comeback conquest of Atlanta.

"The line finished very positively. They were behind, it was the last game of the season, the weather was as atrocious as it can be in Atlanta. They had every conceivable excuse to play out the string. But they came out fired up and just whipped them. It was really good to see that vigor at the end of the season," he said.

In all this, Koncar remains the hub. Curry says he will be "a very good one."

Koncar is a massive man who went from 205 pounds as a college freshman to 280 as a senior. He now plays with about 270 pounds on his 6-foot-5 frame. His biceps measure 18 inches. He is characterized as tough, bordering on mean.

"He's got a bit of a bite," is how grateful quarterback Lynn Dickey puts it.

But Leon McLaughlin, former Packer line coach who guided Koncar through his rookie season, feels that Koncar's greatest asset is his even disposition. He doesn't get down and he doesn't get too high. He is a realist, something that served him well through the early part of the 1976 year.

Bill Curry on Koncar: "A very good one"

Not many rookies had to face the menace that Koncar did his first three games of the season. First it was San Francisco's Cedric Hardman. Then St. Louis' John Zook. Finally, Cincinnati's Coy Bacon.

It was Murder, Inc. Koncar came out of the three weeks reeling like a punching bag. He was clobbered, trampled and pummelled to a purple pulp. The only one who suffered more was Dickey, who suffered the consequences of Koncar's initial ineptness.

"It was the kind of thing I don't like to think about," Koncar said of the rather trying experience. "The offense wasn't doing anything and I felt like it was my fault. But once you see players like that, you have an idea of what's going to happen and you know how good you have to be.

"The defensive ends are so quick and they read everything. If you don't set up fast enough, they'll just come right around you. If you get out too far, they'll come underneath. And if you're not set straight, they'll just take a running start and bull right over you. The tackle is kind of an island out there, so you just can't really afford to make any mistakes."

Koncar made more mistakes as the season progressed. But not nearly as many. He proved to be a quick learner, a quality rooted in determination and hard work.

By the time he took on another of the NFL's premier pass rushers, Chicago Bear Wally Chambers, Koncar was ready. In fact, in two games against Chambers, Koncar did not allow a single quarterback sack.

After their second meeting, the third last game of the season, Chambers growled like a loser despite the Bears' 16-10 win in Lambeau Field. Questioned about his personal battle with Koncar, Chambers answered only grudgingly but admitted "He knows what to do out there."

"The thing is to learn the actual techniques to be a pro tackle," Koncar said in explanation of his progress. "You can have somebody show you how he does this or that. And you can watch it on film a thousand times over. But it takes constant repetition against different defensive linemen to really learn it. You've got to do it so often, in so many different situations, that it comes natural, that you do it automatically.

The problem of learning techniques for most rookies is found in pass blocking. Passing is generally an alternate attack for college teams while it is a way of life for pro teams. And at Colorado, the passing game was based on the rollout method. That calls for an entirely different type of blocking than when the quarterback drops back to set up, as the pros do.

But Koncar conquered that obstacle, as Chambers and others will now attest. Though offensive linemen seldom make reputations in a single year (Minnesota all-pro Ron Yary didn't even start as a rookie), Koncar has made a good start at it.

"I feel I've accomplished some things, but I'm not satisfied," he said in reviewing his maiden season. "When you watch the films, it always seems like there are two or three things each game that you say, 'If only I'd have done this.' Maybe that's the difference between being a rookie and a veteran."

Mark Koncar is likely to find out this year.

The Packers . . . A Gold Mine of Lore, Trivia and Tradition

By Cliff Christl
Green Bay Press-Gazette

The Packers are a gold mine of lore, trivia and tradition.

As the oldest franchise in football, the Packers appear prominently not only in the record books, but the quiz books as well.

The cast of characters responsible for their rich history includes some of football's most legendary, colorful and obscure players. Their deeds, in turn, have been among the best, most bizaare and even humiliating.

Here is a small sampling of some of those actors and their roles:

Howie Ferguson

Howie Ferguson started at fullback for the Packers for most of six years, beginning in 1953. He was a reckless, hard-nosed runner whose best year was 1955, when he gained a highly respectable 859 yards in 192 rushes. However, in 1959 he was one of the first players to feel the wrath of Vince Lombardi. His career with the Packers reached an end and his starting job was turned over to Jim Taylor, who is now a member of the Pro Football Hall of Fame.

"Lombardi didn't cut me; I quit," Ferguson tersely says. "We didn't see eye to eye. To make a long story short, McGee, Hornung and myself reported to town a week early to look for apartments, and he wanted us to report with the rookies. Hornung and McGee went in, but I didn't. I followed instructions as dispatched in a letter and reported on the following Saturday, when the veterans were supposed to come in. Lombardi and I then talked about everything being over the dam, but the following Tuesday I was traded to Pittsburgh. They wouldn't accept me, however, because I had a screw in my shoulder. I was bitter about it for a while, but I can understand his position now. We were probably too much alike. And Taylor was a helluva man. I didn't feel bad about Taylor relieving me of my job. I was a little over the hill at the time."

Today Ferguson lives in Lake Charles, La., and is division manager for Klein-Disco Industrials.

Ken Keuper

During his relatively brief three-year career, Ken Keuper found time to square away at least one big account. He broke Lee Artoe's jaw. It was accidental, but something his teammates felt was justified because of what they regarded as repeated cheap shot tactics by Artoe in previous games.

"In the second game of the year up in Green Bay, he had busted Larry Craig's nose and knocked some teeth out when Larry was getting up from the ground," recalls Keuper, a back with the Packers from 1945-1947. "Then in Chicago we were having another good head-to-head, toe-to-toe game. But it seemed like the whistle would blow and Artoe would come into the pile and rack you up with his elbow. Well, I was a halfback and we called a play where I was was supposed to block on the weak side. And when I got over there I saw this guy coming off Baby Ray's block, going for (Irv) Comp and I hit him with a forearm. It wasn't intentional and I didn't know it was Artoe, it just worked out that way. The forearm was legal then."

Bob Mann

Keuper now lives in Eatonton, Ga., and is working for Southern Railway Systems.

Norm Barry

There are very few survivors remaining from the Packers' first few teams. All of those with the original 1919 team are dead and only a handful remain from the '21 team that was the first to compete in what is now the National Football League. One of those is Norm Barry, a quarterback who played here just that one year and actually began his career using an alias.

"It's so darn vague thinking back that far now," admits Barry. "I don't even remember most of the players. It wasn't anything like it is now. We had some fella (Joe Carr) from Columbus, Ohio, who was the president of the league, and I started out with the Cardinals. But Curly (Lambeau) asked me to come up and play, and I left. We played together at Notre Dame, and I got more money from Green Bay. But Chris O'Brien, who owned the Cardinals, said I couldn't play. And when I got there, Curly said, 'There's some trouble.' He said, 'I got a telegram from this Carr in Columbus and you can't play.' But I told him, 'If I'm here, I'm going to get paid.' And so he said, 'Well, play under the name Smith.' So I did. I don't even know what my first name was; if it was Charley or what? But after that Curly worked it out and I played under my own name. I never stayed there, though. I'd take the train and come up on Saturday and then come home (to Chicago) after the game."

After leaving the Packers, Barry coached the Cardinals for two years and led them to the league championship in 1925. Later, he practiced law in Chicago, and is still living there in retirement at the age of 78.

Nelson Toburen

Although he started as a lowly 14th round draft choice, Nelson Toburen looked like a budding star in his second year with the Packers. He had established himself as a capable reserve linebacker on a championship bound team. However, in the 10th game of the '62 season he broke his neck tackling Johnny Unitas of Baltimore at Lambeau Field and his career came to a tragic end.

"I made the hit and the next thing I knew there was lots and lots of pain in my arms," remembers Toburen. "I didn't know why, but I couldn't move. It was the damndest pain I ever had. I remember the orthopedic, Dr. Nellen, holding my head all the way to the hospital in the ambulance and then 24 hours later, after hanging in traction, them telling me they were going to fix my back. Then the next thing I knew I woke up in a body cast. They didn't have to do surgery, but it was a long time in the cast. Sometimes I think about what it might have been like. I thought I had a future and was going to be there many years, and play until I couldn't any longer. But it didn't work out that way. I looked at it as a rather tragic incident in my career at the time, but I guess it has worked out pretty well in the long run."

After being convinced his career was over a year later, Toburen returned to school and earned his law degree. Today, he is an attorney in Pittsburgh, Kan.

Ed Neal

They didn't come any bigger, stronger or tougher than Ed Neal. As a 6-foot-4, 287-pound middle guard with the Packers from 1945-51, he thrived on intimidating and annihilating opposing centers. "His arms were as big as my leg and as hard as a table," Bulldog Turner, rival and center for the Chicago Bears once remarked. And Turner was in a position to know. He had his nose broken by Neal five times in a single season.

"I'd say it was about 1945 and right out of the box it was the Packers and Bears," Neal recalls with a relish. "I broke his nose three times and he broke mine twice. Then when we went down to Wrigley Field, I broke his nose twice more and he just broke mine once. On top of that, I busted his helmet five times. That's when they were just coming out with those plastic helmets and it wasn't a big thing to bust one. I'd just hit him with a forearm on top of the head and it would bust in two pieces. After that when he'd come to Green Bay, he'd bring two or three helmets along. That was the meanest man I every played against. We had to have a pact after that year and kind of call it off."

Neal is now living on a ranch at Lake Kickapoo, outside Holiday, Tex. He has several business interests and is a deputy sheriff for Wichita and Archer counties.

Ed Neal

Paul Minick

Paul Minick was hardly one of the heroes when the Packers beat the New York Giants 20-6 in a late season showdown on their way to winning their first league championship. He played only one minute in that Nov. 24, 1929 encounter. But he will always be remembered as the lone substitute in one of the NFL's greatest feats of endurance. Ten of the 11 starters for the Packers played the entire 60 minutes against the Giants. Only guard Jim Bowdoin didn't. He took himself out with about one minute remaining and was replaced by Minick, who spent just the '28-29 season with the Packers.

"I usually substituted for Michalske, the guard on the other side," said Minick after refreshing his memory by paging through an old scrapbook. "It was a cold, sloppy, wet day and we were all huddled over on the sidelines. We had yellow uniforms and when I went out on the field it was like someone said in a newspaper back then: I looked like a yellow crocodile."

Minick now lives in Springfield, Mo., following his retirement several years ago from the insurance business.

George and Earl Svendsen

Centers George and Earl Svendsen spent four years together as teammates on the Packers. George played from 1935 to '41 and Earl from '37-40. However, in the '37 College All-Star Game they were matched against each other. Earl was with the All-Stars, who happened to be the victors by a 6-0 score, and George with the Packers.

"We never actually lined up head on," explains George, "but one of my jobs, and so was his when we went downfield was to hit a linebacker. So he got a few licks at me and I got a few at him. I guess we had about a draw. We never talked to each other during the game. I was too busy trying to stay alive and catch my breath. We played in 96 degree temperatures with the humidity at about 100 percent. And we played in brand new jerseys that Curly (Lambeau) bought for the game that were so thick when we tried to blow smoke through them after the game we couldn't."

Following his retirement, George stayed in football as a coach at the University of Minnesota, scout for San Francisco and play-by-play announcer for more than 20 years. Now, he is the president of an electrical company in Minneapolis, Minn., that was founded by his father. And Earl is the vice president.

Russ Letlow

Today the pro football draft is covered almost as thoroughly as any event in sports. However, it hasn't always been like that. Russ Letlow, a guard with the Packers from 1936-42 and again in '46 was the first player they ever drafted and it took months for him to find that out.

"The funny thing was I had already signed with the Cardinals," recalls Letlow. "I had played in the Knights of Columbus all-star game out here (in California) against the Packers in January and that night after the game Curly (Lambeau) invited me down to the Whitcomb Hotel to introduce me to some of the players. And he told them I was going to be his number one draft choice. I told him I'd already signed up with the Cardinals, but he said that would never stand up. And sure enough later I got a telegram from Milan Creighton, the Cardinals' coach, saying I had been released and one from Lambeau the next day saying I was signed up. But the draft was held in late March or April, and I didn't get the telegrams until July. That was the first year they had the draft and nobody paid much attention. I didn't read about it in the papers, not out in California."

Following his retirement, Letlow worked for Phillips 66 for over 20 years in Delano, Calif. Now, he is retired and living in San Luis Obispo, Calif.

Bob Mann

There was never the fuss over the color barrier in football that there was in baseball. However, it wasn't until 1950 that Bob Mann became the first black player to perform with the Packers during the regular season, although others had tried out before then.

"I didn't put much emphasis on it and there wasn't much attention paid to it," said Mann, an end from '50-54, about his enlistment with the team. "I had contract problems with the Lions and I came up near the end of the season. Then I guess I got a break and caught a crucial pass and sprang a runner with a block that helped my career. But I don't think there was much significance placed on my being (the first black player). All the other players were very nice and friendly. I enjoyed Green Bay. I think it is the greatest football town there is with the possible exception of Columbus, Ohio. I had no difficulty there. I enjoyed the city very much and the people very much."

Today, Mann practices law and lives in Detroit.

Tom O'Malley

Probably no Packer player had a shorter or more painful career than Tom O'Malley. He played one game at quarterback in a relief role against Detroit in 1950 and threw a team record six interceptions in a 45-7 drubbing. The next week he was cut and eventually wound up in the Canadian Football League. He played with Ottawa for three years and gained a feeling of personal redemption when he led it to the 1951 Grey Cup title.

"Green Bay was one of the worst experiences of my life," says O'Malley with understandable candor. "I don't want to say anything detrimental about the ballclub, but I came from the Browns, where I thought I had made the team, and got into Green Bay, which I thought was one of the most disorganized outfits I have ever seen. I asked for a playbook and the whole time I was there they never gave me one. I don't want to put a black mark on anybody, but I didn't know what was going on. I didn't start the game. Tobin (Rote) started and in the middle of the second quarter was when I went in. I had been there about 10 days, didn't know the plays or anything about the system. I'll never forget it."

Today O'Malley lives in York, Pa., and is director of industrial relations for Cole, a division of Litton Industries.

Paul Duhart

Paul Duhart spent only one year with the Packers, but that was long enough for him to make one of the biggest defensive plays in their history. In the 1944 championship game, he helped preserve the Packers' 14-7 lead over the New York Giants by aborting a desperation drive with an interception of an Arnie Herber pass. Herber who gained his greatest fame as a member of the Packers, had the Giants moving late in the fourth quarter when Duhart picked off one of his long bombs at the 20-yard line.

"They had thrown that pass three or four plays sooner and had gone to the same guy (Frank Libel)," says Duhart with a vivid memory. "He was their deep threat and we both went up for the ball, and I almost had the gosh darn thing. I had it right in my hands and dropped it, and I can't tell you how I felt. It was one of their favorite plays and three or four plays later they came back with it again. This time I just sat back and waited for him (Libel), and the ball was under thrown and I managed to hold on to it."

After playing a prominent role with the Packers that year as a rookie back, Duhart was forced to join the Pittsburgh Steelers the next year. His class didn't actually graduate until 1945 and so the Steelers selected him in the draft even though he had turned pro the year before. He then spent one year with the Steelers before retiring as a result of a neck injury. From there he went to coaching high school football for 21 years and his teams once won 31 straight games. Today, he lives in Huntington Beach, Calif., and teaches and coaches golf at Arcadia High School.

Clyde Goodnight

Clyde Goodnight had no illusions when he became a starting end with the Packers in 1946. He accepted reality and realized he'd never be better than his predecessor, the immortal Don Hutson. Still, Goodnight enjoyed a creditable five-year career from 1945-49.

"I have to be honest; I really didn't feel any pressure because I didn't think anybody could take Don Hutson's place," says Goodnight, thinking back to that '46 season. "It never crossed my mind that anybody could do that, although I felt maybe some of the fans might have expected too much. My feelings were that it was just a great thrill to follow a guy like that. I played the same position Don did my rookie year and then Don coached the ends for three years after that, so I had a deep respect for him. Whatever I learned, I learned from Don. He was a great teacher."

During his career with the Packers, Goodnight attended medical school at the University of Tennessee during the off-season and is now a family physician in his hometown, Holland, Tex.

Swede Johnston

Chester (Swede) Johnston's judgement may be open to scrutiny, but certainly not his courage. Until the NFL made helmets compulsory, he was one of a vanishing breed who insisted on playing without. Somehow, though, he managed to survive for six years as a halfback, beginning with irregular stays in the early '30s that are ignored in the Packer's all-time register and concluding with an uninterrupted stretch from '34-39 that followed a brief hitch with the St. Louis Gunners.

"I used to be a sprinter," explains Johnston, "and sprinters can run better without a headgear. I felt more at ease. It didn't concern me. I picked up a cauliflower ear by not wearing one. I got hit on it too many times. But I never thought about getting hurt. It just never dawned on me, although as I look back, I'd wear one if I had to do it all over again because of the possibilities of serious injury. I know Bob Sampson, who owned the St. Louis team told me recently that when we played once in the South Side Artillery Barn against the Chicago Shamrocks and they had to paint the goal posts on the walls because the building was too short, and the goal lines were just a couple of feet from the wall; that their head coach was worried I'd run into the wall and it would be the end of me."

A native of Appleton, Johnston is now retired and splitting his time between Pittsburgh and St. Louis. He recently retired after working for 34 years with Westinghouse Electric.

Andy Uram

It has been 34 years since Andy Uram carried the football for the Packers, but his team and league record for the longest run from scrimmage still stands. On Oct. 8, 1939 at the State Fair Grounds in Milwaukee, he broke free for a 97-yard run against the Chicago Cardinals.

Herber was calling signals and he wanted to get in better position for punting," recalls Uram. "The hash marks were only in about 10 yards in those days and he wanted to get the ball near the middle of the field. I went off tackle. Then to the outside and down the sideline for a touchdown. The blocking was good; it was one of those picture plays."

Uram still lives in Green Bay and works as a salesman for Premier Industrial Co.

Al Carmichael

Al Carmichael may have produced the most electrifying play in the history of the Packers on Oct. 7, 1956. At old City Stadium against the Chicago Bears, he returned a kickoff 106 yards for a touchdown to establish a league record that still stands over 20 years later.

"I remember it very well because I was late getting to the stadium that day and we were always instructed not to run the ball out of the end zone under any circumstances. We were coached and schooled that way," remembers Carmichael. "Ironically, I had a fairly big argument about it in the locker room with Lisle Blackbourn just prior to running on the field. So I told Veryl Switzer, the other receiver, that I didn't care where the ball was I was going to run it out. And he kept cautioning me not to. I said I didn't care and so it all really began in a moment of anger more than anything. In fact, when I did catch it I looked at the referee, thinking I might have stepped out of the end zone, and he just shrugged his shoulders. Maybe that hesitation is what opened it up I don't know. But I remember when I came off the field Blackbourn looked like he was upset with me and he didn't congratulate me or anything. The next day, though, everything was all right. Those things come and go."

Carmichael currently lives in Laguna Niguel, Calif., and has his own real estate business.

Gary Weaver

More Sure of Himself

Fiery and active, Gary Weaver leaps into action against Lions in Green Bay in 1976.

By Dale Hofmann
The Milwaukee Sentinel

The grin managed to carve a little niche for itself on Gary Weaver's even features, but it was no easy job.

Born of effort, it was more rueful than joyful. This was Monday morning after all, and Weaver hurt. He had been hurting since the second half of the Chicago Bears game the day before.

Hurting enough to leave the game for a while, but maybe not too much to finish it. And it was the memory of that that brought the grin.

"It was all show, man," said Weaver. "I went out with that bad leg, and when I came back in I couldn't do a thing.

"If they'd run to my side, they could have had anything they wanted.

The point is the Bears didn't run anything to his side, and that tells you something about the progress of Gary Weaver in the fraternity of National Football League linebackers.

There was a time when everybody ran at the Packers' left side. It was considered lunacy to go anywhere else. That time wasn't so long ago. Only the 1975 season after Ted Hendricks went West, leaving a hole in Green Bay's defense that could comfortably accommodate your average elephant stampede.

Now a year later, Weaver was play acting through an injury and the Bears were looking elsewhere.

That afternoon told you something, too, about the progress of Gary Weaver in the Packers' estimation. Even a hobbling Weaver, they reasoned, was better than no Weaver at all.

The Packers have gotten used to having Weaver in that spot, and slowly Weaver has gotten used to it as well. It hasn't been an overnight process, though.

Weaver first broke into the starting lineup with the Packers in the last four games of the 1975 season. He had come to Green Bay from Oakland after training camp, which means he was playing catch up for most of the year just learning the team's system.

And he admits it showed.

"I was playing on sheer physical ability," he said. "I wasn't thinking confidently. It was more or less what the coaches might say.

"Things have been a whole lot easier since. With more time at the position I've had a chance to see lots more, to be in on more situations. Now I'm lots more sure of myself."

A lot of other people feel that way about him as well. He led the team in tackles last year with 98 and in assists with 15. He also caused one interception and recovered one fumble. And he was named the Packers' outstanding defensive player for the 1976 season.

None of which can be expected to leave him overly impressed. "To me statistics are just for whoever reads the paper to show whether the game was one sided or not," he said. "As far as what really happened during the game, they don't necessarily show it.

"A lot of important plays do not show up in the statistics, like stopping a team in a fourth and one situation. You can make a million tackles, and if you're making them in the end zone or too late, they don't mean much."

What does mean something is the impression a player makes on his coach. In Weaver's case that has been a good one.

"Yeah, I think Gary had a pretty good year," said Packer Linebacker Coach John Meyer, who is not known for any extensive tendency toward overstatement.

"For the first time in his career, he got to be a starter for a whole year, and I think that helped him. I wouldn't say he surpassed our expectations, but he certainly developed as well as we thought he would.

"All he needed was some playing time. The year before all he really had an opportunity to do was learn the system. Everybody knew he had talent. Once he got the chance, he played quite well."

While Weaver does have a full season as a starter behind him, it hardly qualifies him as a greybeard among the league's linebackers. He was drafted in the seventh round out of Fresno State by the Raiders in 1973, and he played in a total of 24 games for them the next two years. But almost all of that action was on special teams.

So there is still a considerable amount of inexperience with which the 27-year old Weaver has to contend.

He's also relatively small by NFL standards with 225 pounds distributed on a 6-1 frame, but it's an admirably muscled frame that has proven to be rather durable. Meyer doesn't think size will hinder Weaver. On the other hand, a well run passing game by Packer opponents might.

"He plays the run fairly well," said Meyer, "but he may need to work a little on learning pattern development. I'm not saying his pass defense is all that bad. It just needs some work.

"He's not real big, but he's an exceptionally strong athlete. For years they've had big linebackers around here, but you look around the league and you see a lot of smaller ones who are very good. Right now, I'll take any kind."

Weaver's physique is massive enough, however, that he can't walk into any old men's shop and pick out a sports coat or a jacket that strikes his fancy. That's something he learned long ago. He also came up with an eminently practical solution to that problem long ago.

He makes his own clothes.

He's taken courses at the San Francisco School of Fashion, and he hauls a sewing machine along to training camp every summer. Far from needling Weaver over his needlework, his teammates have asked him to do some tailoring for them occasionally.

"Some of the guys have asked me to do clothes for them," he said. "I really enjoy it. It helps me to relax."

Relaxing can come hard to Weaver, too. Especially on game days and especially when he's confronted with black cats, broken mirrors, spilled salt shakers and ladders and such. In other words, he's superstitious.

"I wish I was not that way, but I am," he said. I really believe it. On Sunday if nobody steps on my heel before the game I know I'm going to have a good game.

"When I'm getting ready for a game, I always do the left side of my body first. Have the left ankle taped first, put on my left sock first, left shoe, put my left leg into my pants first. I can't explain it. It's just something I believe in."

Weaver's belief in the fates doesn't mean he's trusting his career to them, however. Meyer once went so far as to describe him as "A small Dave Robinson" and Packer zealots like to think of him as a future all-pro.

Weaver considers the former a great compliment and the latter a laudable goal. But he will have to work to live up to either, and so far he's shown a willingness to do just that.

He even made out a weekly scouting report on himself after every game last year. He grades his own performance after viewing the films, and he has separate scouting reports on each tight end who blocked him and each running back he played against.

Naturally, that type of dedication appeals to people like Meyer and Head Coach Bart Starr. And naturally Meyer hopes Weaver keeps it up this year now that he's established himself in a starting job.

race, sometimes you don't push yourself as hard," said Meyer. "It helps if someone is fighting for your position or even if someone behind you is just playing quite well.

"We're looking for competition at every spot. We really don't have much depth at linebacker. Right at the moment there isn't anyone pushing Gary very hard."

There is also a considerable amount of youth among Meyer's linebacking troops this year. Fred Carr, of course, is a veteran, and so are Jim Carter and Don Hansen. But Carter and Hansen play the same position.

The other linebackers on the squad are Tom Toner, Tom Perko, Jim Gueno and Weaver, and none of them has had an abundance of playing time.

Nevertheless the Packers didn't select any linebackers in this year's collegiate draft, so Meyer has to figure on going with the people he has.

"I don't think that means we're satisfied," said Meyer. "We were drafting for athletes. The linebackers that were available weren't as good as the other athletes we took when it was our turn to draft."

There has been some talk, however, of making a linebacker out of Ezra Johnson, the defensive end from little Morris Brown College whom Green Bay made its second choice of the first round. If Johnson doesn't add the poundage necessary to play in an NFL line, he could eventually be Carr's replacement on the right side.

There would be a nifty bit of irony connected with that should it come to pass. Johnson, remember, was taken by the Packers with the draft choice they received from Oakland as partial payment for Hendricks.

And Weaver was available to the Packers for the $100 waiver price because Hendricks took his spot on the Raider roster. Weaver had pulled a hamstring during his last summer at Oakland, and the Raiders' Al Davis tried to sneak him through on injured waivers.

It didn't work out that way because Starr snapped up Weaver. And now there's a chance the Packers could wind up with two outside linebackers for the price of Hendricks.

A small twist of fate like that might be enough to make Gary Weaver smile.

Vernon Biever, two-time Hall of Fame photographer, nailed this picture of Quaterback Lynn Dickey escaping what seemed to be a sure sack in the second-quarter of the Packer-Raider game in Oakland Oct. 24, 1976.

Ted Hendricks, the former Packer linebacker, blitzed on a third and 10 play and had Dickey cold. But Dickey ducked under Hendricks, flipped him over his back and then completed a 21-yard pass to Steve Odom.

Dickey turned in his best game of the season against the eventual Super Bowl champions, completing 22 out of 34 attempts for 303 yards, but the Packers lost a tough 18-14 game, in which Fred Carr blocked two extra point kicks.

Some of the pictures taken by Biever, the Packers' official photographer, have been used in the Packer Yearbook since 1960.

Lynn Dickey

"He Is Going To Be a Nucleus"

By Len Wagner
Green Bay Press-Gazette

How would the Packers have fared last year with Ken Stabler at quarterback?

Stabler, the left-armed Raider Rifle, dazzled the National Football League in 1976 with 194 completions in 291 attempts for 66.7 percent success, 2,737 yards and 27 touchdowns. His team won 16 of 17 games, including the Super Bowl.

Stabler was the Oakland star. Or, at least he was one of the stars in the far-flung Oakland galaxy. The Raiders claimed four all-pro positions and had seven players named to the Pro Bowl game.

The Packers had not one all-pro. Nor did the Packers have even one player named to the Pro Bowl team.

So how would the Packers have fared with Ken Stabler at quarterback? Perhaps the question really should be how Ken Stabler would have fared as the Packer quarterback.

The simple fact of NFL life is that the quarterback is the key player on the team. But the quarterback's success is in direct proportion to the talents of the rest of the team.

Lynn Dickey twinkles before media after victory over Eagles in Green Bay Oct. 17.

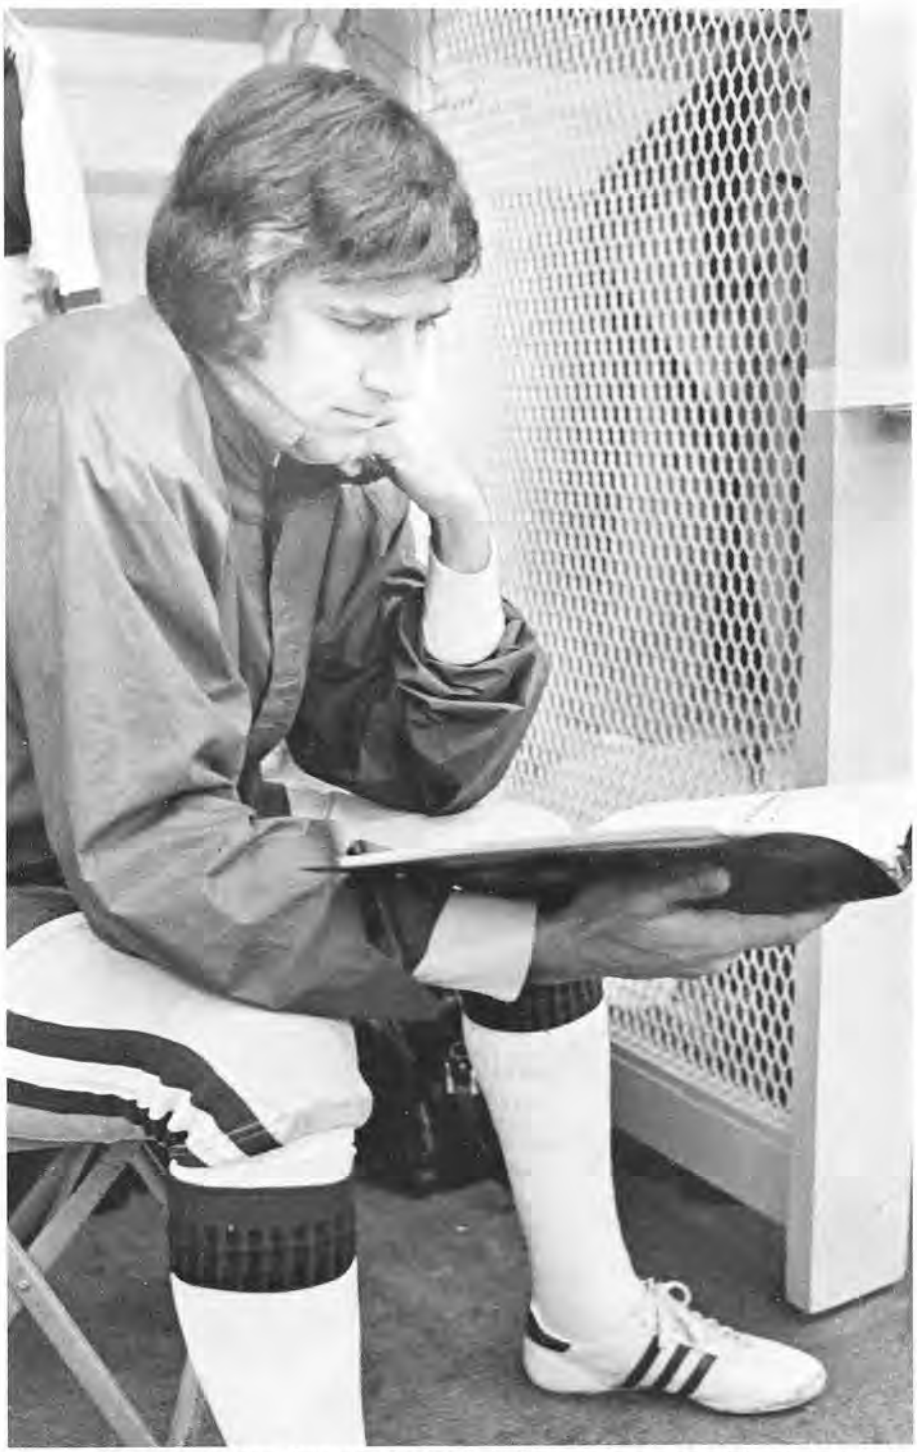
Thus, it becomes virtually impossible to accurately evaluate the performance of Lynn Dickey in his first year as the Great Hope of the Packers.

Packer quarterback coach Zeke Bratkowski, with a wary eye and ear on the sights and sounds of optimism that greeted Dickey's arrival even before the opening of the 1976 training camp, echoed the theme by observing, "He'll be only as good as his supporting cast."

Bratkowski, it might be pointed out, is particularly well qualified to make such an observation. Laboring for second division teams during most of his pro career, Bratkowski was considered little more than a journeyman quarterback. Then he was picked up by Vince Lombardi as insurance for Bart Starr. And Packer fans well remember the many games Bratkowski saved with relief performces far superior to the journeyman level. But he was playing with an exceptionally talented band of teammates. Indeed, it was a championship crowd around him.



Randy Johnson studies Packer playbook before victory over Falcons in Atlanta Dec. 12.

The Packer cast of 1976, with and without Dickey at the reins, managed just a 5-9 record, a mere one game improvement over the previous season, hardly what is expected of a savior.

And in the 10 games he played before suffering a shoulder separation, Dickey completed 115 of 243 passes for 47.3 per cent, almost 20 points below Stabler. He gained 1,465 yards and hit for seven touchdowns. He ranked 13th in the National Conference, which has 14 teams. All in all, it was a comparatively mediocre set of statistics.

Still, because of that obvious gap in the abilities of their mates, Dickey cannot realistically be compared to Stabler.

Thus, Bratkowski remains convinced that Dickey is "One of the top young quarterbacks who has been drafted in the last few years. He's the type of quarterback who is going to be a nucleus at that position."

Bratkowski is also convinced "we're going to be a better football team," thereby, using his own formula, strongly indicating he feels Dickey should be a better quarterback.

That's presuming, of course, that Dickey's injured shoulder is totally healed. And Dickey, basing his opinion on lots of anxious experimenting, is sure that it is. So are the Packers, who have been equally anxious about the situation.

The injury came in the first Bear game when Dickey was clobbered hard three times. The first two merely left him gasping for air. The third, coming with about eight minutes left in the game, left him grabbing for his shoulder, though he later quipped, "It was just another day at the office."

And, in fact, it was pretty much a typical Sunday for Dickey. Relying on the Packer line for protection was almost as foolhardy as stowing away on the moonship. And with a running game as effective as a jogger with bunions, it was open season on Dickey every week.

Therefore, it is not surprising that in the games in which his mates managed to flex some muscle, Dickey also was impressive. In fact, at times he was very impressive.

In a string of three games, he completed 64.9 per cent of his passes, 50 of 77, for 744 yards. Unfortunately, in his other seven games, he was only 65-166 for 39.4 per cent. But then he didn't have Cliff Branch, Fred Biletnikoff, Dave Casper, Art Shell etc.

Interestingly, though, one of those games in which Dickey sparkled was against the Raiders. The Packers, following a disastrous start, had just won three in a row to square their record at 3-3.

The game was in Oakland and the Packers stunned the Raider folks with a 57-yard Dickey to Ken Payne bomb in the first quarter for a 7-0 lead. Oakland came back to score 18 points in the second quarter behind Stabler. But the Pack came back again to make it 18-14 when Dickey passed the team brilliantly downfield with about seven minutes to play.

Disappointingly, that was the end of the scoring. But the Packers had staged a fighting performance and Dickey had hit 22 of 34 passes for 303 yards, leaving the Raiders slightly shaken.

As far as Dickey was concerned, however, it was the turning point of the season.

"If we would have won that game, it would have done something for our confidence. There's no telling what would have happened. We came so close, but lost, and I think it took some fire out of us." The Packers lost to Detroit the next week, 27-6. They had beaten the Lions just a month before. The Pack than rallied in the last quarter to beat long-suffering New Orleans and lost to Chicago.

That was the conclusion to Dickey's year.

"I didn't feel like personally I had a very good year," he said.

Carlos Brown escapes Jim Osborne for key yardage against Bears in Green Bay Nov. 14.

Much of that feeling was rooted in those opening three games when the Pack floundered badly before the 49ers, Cardinals and Bengals and Dickey managed to connect on only 29 of 82 passes for 35 per cent. He was sacked 12 times.

"That was a team thing and I was a contributing factor," he said, "but by getting off to such a bad start, I was hitting such a low percentage of passes it would have taken many games of high percentage passing just to get back to 50 per cent."

But Dickey, who prefers to discuss his play in a team context rather than as an individual, added, "But we did bounce back and I think we improved."

The Packers won one more game after Dickey was sidelined, beating Atlanta in the finale, 24-20. Neither team had anything to play for except a final paycheck. But the Packers had a fellow named Randy Johnson, who had more incentive than just dollars. He would like to displace Dickey as the Packers' No. 1 quarterback.

Johnson, who had been cut most recently by Washington, was hired after Dickey was hurt and the Pack had only young, green Carlos Brown in the quarterback position.

Brown had gone 23-66 for his three starting assignments, sending the Packers right back to where they were after the first three games of the season.

On came Johnson. And with him, a victory. The fact that the Falcons were about as inspired as a 12-year-old boy washing the dinner dishes was beside the point to the Packers, and particularly Johnson. He completed 16 of 25 passes for 165 yards and scored one touchdown himself.

How much it had to do with his or the team's success might be debatable, but Johnson credited the performance to a change in philosophy. Instead of trying to establish a running game in the hope it would open up the passing lanes, Johnson said he convinced the coaching staff the week prior to the game to reverse that. The Packers put the emphasis on play action, using the passing game to open the defense for the running game.

"I think it worked pretty successfully," Johnson said. And perhaps filled with the heady wine of a rare victory, he acknowledged "I was just helping out now, but with a full training camp, I'll be battling for the job."

Coach Starr, however, emphasized that while Johnson's contribution and attitude were much appreciated, Dickey is still No. 1.

"You don't lose your starting status because you are injured and I don't know that anybody would want to claim it under those grounds," he said.

In any case, it became apparent that Johnson had put himself in the running for the reserve job. Brown, now a pro junior, has a strong arm but has had very little experience at quarterback, even in college, where he was an end and halfback.

Though the Packer staff sees much potential in him, he remains well below the standard for a pro quarterback at this stage. Johnson's presence reinforces the position and adds to that "supporting cast" that is so important to any quarterback, any team.

Oh, and about how Stabler would have fared with the Packers?

It should be pointed out the average number of quarterback sacks suffered per team throughout the NFL was 35. Packer quarterbacks were downed 41 times, Raider quarterbacks 28. There are no official statistics on the near misses.

THE RECORD BOOK

Punting specialist Dave Beverly gets a heavy rush from two Eagles in Green Bay October 17 but managed to get the kick away.

The Packers improved on their punting record in 1976 . . . and then again they didn't.

They set an all-time team mark in 1975 with 95 punts, with Steve Broussard kicking 29 and Dave Beverly 66. Broussard had three blocked in the league opener and after three games gave way to Beverly. Those were the only punts blocked that season.

Beverly took over the job alone in '76 and reduced on that 95, delivering 84 punts — enough to break the Packer record of 81 set by left-footed Donny Anderson in 1970.

All teams in the NFL hate punts because it means the offense is giving up the ball. Winning teams usually kick fewer times than losing teams.

Example: The Packers lost their first three games in '76 and Beverly was forced to punt 26 times — an average of nearly nine per start. Green Bay won the next three and Beverly punted only 14 times — barely five per game.

Beverly, who had one kick blocked in '76 (by Seattle), averaged six punts per game for the season.

While 84 seems like a lot of punts, two booters in the NFL kicked over 100, John James of Atlanta and Tom Blanchard of New Orleans each kicking 101. Bob Parsons of the Chicago Bears delivered 100.

Ray Guy of Oakland and Jerrel Wilson of Kansas City, considered two of the best punters in the league, kicked 66 and 67, respectively, which is unusual in view of the opposite records of the two clubs. Oakland, the Super Bowl champ, lost only one game and Kansas City posted 5-9, same as the Packers. Still more surprising was the Miami Dolphins' total of only 62 punts by Larry Seiple. Miami had a 6-8 record.

One Packer reached the Yearbook's Top Four. Lynn Dickey completed 22 passes in the Packers' tough 18-14 loss to the Raiders (out of 34 attempts) to gain a tie with Cecil Isbell and Don Horn. Bart Starr holds the record of 26, set in 1958 vs. Baltimore in 46 attempts.

John Brockington and Chester Marcol added to their career records last season. Brockington ranks No. 2 behind Jim Taylor in Most Rushing Attempts and Most Yards Gained. Marcol now has kicked 90 field goals in his five seasons.

As in the past, the following Packer records are presented with apologies to all those Packer stars who played before records were kept:

GREEN BAY PACKER YEARBOOK
P.O. BOX 262
GREEN BAY, WISCONSIN 54305

It's Great To Win

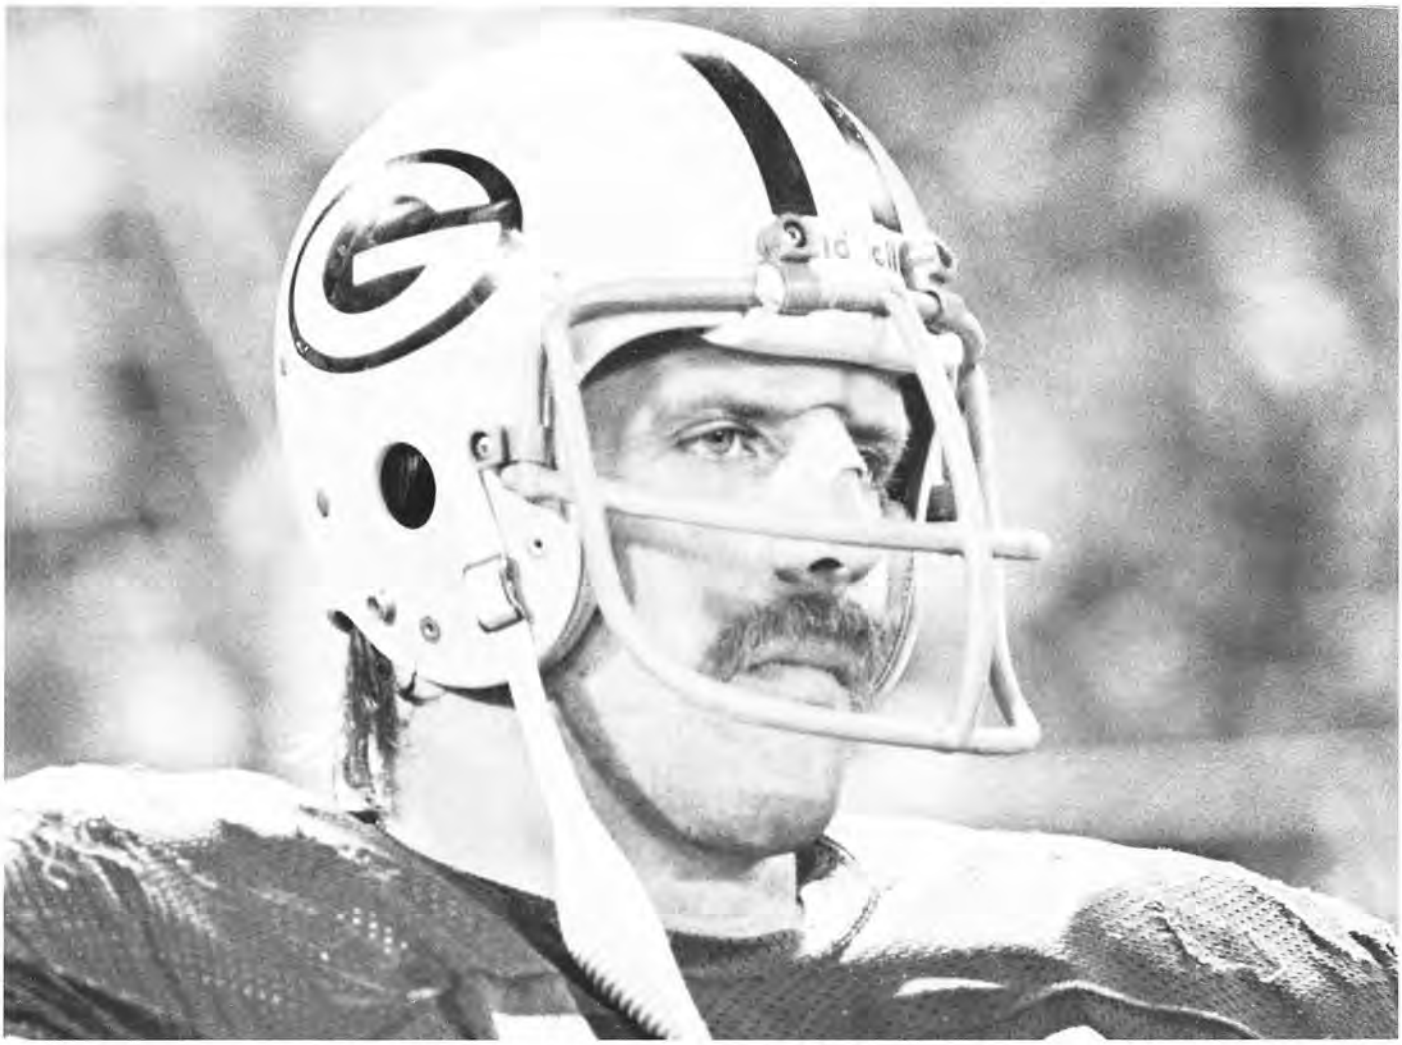
After three straight losses, the Packers were more than a bit hungry when they battled the Lions in Lambeau Field Oct. 3, 1976.

Thus with 1:04 left in the game and Green Bay leading 24-14, the scoreboard wowed the audience of 56,267 — not to mention the Lions, by flashing some happy words: IT'S GREAT TO WIN!!!

In their long history, the Packers have scored 10 or more points in a minute or so to win many times . . . but on this particular day the Packers and the scoreboard operator were convinced the Lions couldn't do it.

After the Packers took a 24-14 lead, they forced a punt and then froze the ball for 12 plays, using up four minutes and 32 seconds before giving it up on downs on the Lion 30 with 1:04 to go.

The Lions made a move to the Packer 15 but it all ended happily when Dave Roller and Alden Roche sacked Lion QB Greg Landry for a 14 yard loss.



A serious Jim Carter looks to future with the Packers

The Jim Carter Story

By Jon Echternacht
Editor, Packer Report

Jim Carter may have suffered the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune in his seven-year football career but as the eighth approaches he seems to be taking arms against his sea of troubles and working toward an injury free and improved 1977 campaign.

The controversial bachelor from Minnesota has enjoyed anything but a normal evolution of circumstances in his life with the Packers.

A broken arm, a broken leg, knee problems, fan disapproval and teammate resentment have surrounded Carter through the past seven years. One would think it enough to blow the whistle on the business and look for another line of work. But Carter is not disgruntled with his chosen profession.

The veteran middle linebacker started training hard for the new season last March, running three miles a day with teammate Eric Torkelson. "I'm afraid to come to training camp out of shape, it's kind of like signing your own death warrant. I have been working hard on getting my legs as strong as possible for the season," he said in sun-washed Lambeau Field last spring just prior to one of his daily workouts.

The broken arm last season was probably the most frustrating of the occupational hazards Carter has yet endured.

"I'm 28-years-old, I'll be 29 in the fall and this is when an athlete is supposed to be in his prime. I came to camp last year in good shape and lighter than the previous year and I felt I was going to have a good season, but you can't condition bones," he reflected.

"Even with a broken arm, a player should be able to come back into action in some of the later games, but then I had to have a plate put in the bone," he said revealing a long scar on his right wrist.

"I can sure tell when it is going to rain now. I get a pain in the arm." The arm has recovered, it will continue to pain at times, but it is nothing that should hamper his play.

Carter was a third round draft choice in 1970 from the University of Minnesota where he had been captain of the football team as a fullback and a regular defenseman on the Gopher hockey squad.

The Packers made an outside linebacker out of the collegiate offensive star and he played in 10 games his rookie season. He was thrown into regular duty in mid-season of the year when Dave Robinson suffered a torn Achilles tendon.

In 1971 Carter was moved to the middle by Coach Dan Devine and replaced veteran Ray Nitschke in 10 games, a move that was quite unpopular with the fans who made their displeasure known verbally during the games.

In 1972 the Packers won the Central Division title and Carter logged in 14 regular season games as the starting middle linebacker.

In 1973 he started in 14 games, was selected as the team's most valuable defensive player and was chosen to play in the Pro Bowl after the season, but he began to have knee problems.

In 1974 he feels he had his best year, starting another 14 regular season games even though the knee problems continued, a carryover from earlier injuries in high school hockey.

Also in 1974, with friend and linebacker Larry Hefner, Carter walked across the picket line while the NFL Players Assn. was conducting a strike during training camp, and went to work against the wishes of the other Packer veterans.

"At that time the players' slogan was 'No Freedom, No Football,' and I didn't agree with the freedom issues," he said. "I felt we should work to get more benefits, which is what the association came around to placing their emphasis on in later negotiations."

The move may have brought him closer to the fans who had alienated him after he took Nitschke's spot, but it also caused some hard feelings and resentment among his teammates.

In 1975 he played in 13 games on the regular season, but suffered a break in the small bone in his left leg during the annual intra-squad game which hampered his performance during most of the season.

"I never fully recovered until the last few games," he said "and maybe the big mistake I made then was going to work on it too soon and not giving the leg enough time to recover. But I felt I had to play."

And then last year, the broken arm in training camp and the frustration of sitting out the entire season on injured reserve.

"I'm really looking forward to another season. The bones have healed and are usually stronger at the point of the break after they have healed. And the doctors tell me I can play another five or six years. I know I can play for awhile, some coaches are convinced I can't play another year, but I know I can play," he said.

Carter, who has always been known as candid and forthright in his comments, admits maybe the fans wouldn't have been as tough on him if he would have been the shy type when he was tabbed to replace Nitschke. "The defense needs leadership at the middle linebacker position and I wasn't shy about taking the job. If I would have been the kind to say 'gee wiz, I think I can do the job,' it might have met with better reaction, but I'm not that way, and anyway we all know the fans are demanding in Green Bay.

"I may always be remembered in Green Bay as the guy who took Ray Nitschke's job, no matter how well my career goes. There will always be those who hate me for it."

Carter was as sought after for his hockey talents as his football prowess in college (he was an all-stater in both sports at South St. Paul Minn., high school) and you might think in retrospect he might have rather strapped on the ice skates instead of football cleats in the pro ranks, but not so.

"I have never wanted to change my profession. Of course when I came to the Packers there were still only six teams in the NHL and shortly after that the expansion made room for a lot more players. When I look back on the situation, I see hockey players in the pro ranks who played behind me in college, but hindsight is always 20-20. I never wanted to change."

Carter has also been quoted and misquoted about planning to retire on various occasions. "I have never stated that I wanted to retire. Last year in the frustration of having to sit out the season on injured reserve, I really thought about it, but I guess after the last game of the season when you are on a team that doesn't make the playoffs, everybody thinks about retiring, but after a few months of rest, you change your mind. I really love playing the game. It feels good to accomplish something on Sunday after a hard week of practice. It is a lot like the daily workouts. I really hate coming over here and going through all that running, but I really feel good afterwards."

Meanwhile, Carter has developed in the business world in the off season. He owned and operated the Left Guard Restaurant in Janesville, Wis., until last year when he sold out. Last December, he bought a disco-lounge in Manitowoc called Yesterdays and he says business is booming. He also owns real estate in Western Wisconsin.

In addition he has applied his speech-communication degree from the University of Minnesota by doing some TV work which included broadcasts of high school games in the area last fall and he would like to try his hand in a major network operation sometime.

"You know my dad is my best friend —"

His father, Bob Carter, has a successful car dealership in Inver Grove Heights, Minn., and the two have kicked around the idea of starting a franchise in Wisconsin under Jim's name.

"All this is in preparation for the time when I can't play football anymore. I have grown accustomed to some of the things a good salary can provide me and I want to continue enjoying them after I'm through with football," He said.

Carter is the product of an Irish father and a Swedish mother (the worst possible combination, he says, because it involves having a bull head and a hot temper) and he credits his determination to their example. "It sounds trite, but I know I have to live my life with me, therefore I want to make the best of it."

As far as the 1977 season is concerned, Carter thinks the Packers may still be short a couple of key people, but they have as good a personnel as a lot of teams.

"You know, my Dad is my best friend. He never misses a game at Green Bay or in Milwaukee plus he always catches the game with the Vikings in Minnesota. I hope we can have a good season so he doesn't have to take so much flak from the Viking fans back at his office."

Starr And Gregg Enter Canton

Vince Lombardi said it best:

"Forrest Gregg is the best football player I ever coached."

"Bart Starr is the greatest quarterback who ever played. Starr is the greatest because he won the most championships. It's as simple as that."

Lombardi, the Packers' immortal coach during the flaming 1960s, always had a special place in his heart for Starr and Gregg because both were intelligent and, above all, fierce team players. What's more, they never stopped working hard.

Starr and Gregg were a cinch to make the Pro Football Hall of Fame in Canton, Ohio in time but the HOF Board of Selectors saw fit to enter them by a landslide in their first year of eligibility, which is five years after their playing careers ended.

Both finished active competition in 1971 — Starr after 16 years in Packer silks. Gregg played 14 seasons in Green Bay and then answered a call for help in Dallas for a year when the Cowboy offensive line was ruined by injuries.

They were enshrined in Canton Saturday, July 30 in one of the greatest classes in Hall of Fame history. Joining Starr and Gregg were Gale Sayers, the Chicago Bears' great halfback; Frank Gifford, the all-around halfback star with the New York Giants; and Bill Willis, the spectacular middle guard who won all-pro honors in each of his eight seasons with the Cleveland Browns.

Starr and Gregg are the second and third players from the Packers' great 1960s to enter the Hall. They join Fullback Jim Taylor, who was elected in 1976.

Starr and Gregg both came up in 1956, Starr a 17th draft choice out of Alabama and Gregg a second pick out of SMU. Gregg missed the 1957 season due to military service.

Like most quarterbacks coming into the NFL, Starr didn't set the league on fire as a rookie but he did impress Coach Liz Blackbourn enough to permit the trade of Tobin Rote to Detroit. The Packers floundered the next two years but the arrival of Lombardi in 1959 changed all that.

Starr convinced Lombardi midway in the '59 season that he was THE Green Bay quarterback and in 1960 Starr led the Packers to the Western Division title. The Packers lost the NFL championship game in Philadelphia and it was the last time Green Bay was to lose a title in that decade.

Along the way, the Packers, with Starr at the throttle, won five NFL titles plus Super Bowl I and II. Starr was elected Most Valuable Player in the two Bowls.

Starr ended his career with a league-record 57.4 completion percentage on 1,808 completions in 3,149 attempts in 197 league games. He won the league's passing championship three times.

Bart was greatest in the big game. He completed 60 percent of his 195 attempts in League, Division and Super Bowl competition. Yet, Starr's most spectacular play wasn't a pass. It was his quarterback sneak against Dallas in 13-below weather that gave the Packers an unprecedented three straight championships after the 1967 season.

Unfortunately, Gregg has no statistics to back up his great play at right tackle. But for eight consecutive seasons he was an all-pro (1960-67) as an offensive tackle . . . plus. In 1965, injuries to Jerry Kramer forced Gregg to a guard spot for most of the season. This seemingly ruined his shot at all-pro honors, but one wire service picked him an all-pro guard, the other an all-pro at tackle.

Gregg was outstanding at all phases of line play, blocking for the passer and straight ahead blocking on running plays. He had enough speed to pull out on sweeps.

Long-time students of the game, Starr and Gregg both are head coaches in the NFL. Starr, of course, leads the Packers and Gregg heads the Browns. Gregg won Coach of the Year honors in 1976 for leading his team to a 9-5 record.

The Packers now have 12 members in the Canton Hall of Fame — Cal Hubbard, Don Hutson, Curly Lambeau, Johnny Blood, Clarke Hinkle, Mike Michalske, Arnie Herber, Tony Canadeo, Lombardi, Taylor, Starr and Gregg. Two other former Packers, who made their name elsewhere, are in the Hall — Walt Kiesling, Len Ford and Emlen Tunnell. Kiesling was a player and coach at Pittsburgh; Ford was with the Browns; and Tunnell the Giants.

Green Bay has its own Hall of Fame and last January five Packer greats were inducted, including Starr and Gregg. Others joining the permanent Hall were Cub Buck, the first big-time player signed by the Packers; Charley Mathys, the Pack's first passing quarterback; Willie Wood, star defensive halfback during the 1960s; and Andrew B. Turnbull, the Green Bay businessman who sought and obtained funding for the Packers in the early 1920s, thus enabling them to sign players and stay alive.

The Green Bay Packers . . . and YOU

Coach Bart Starr shows new Packer recruiting brochure to first draft choice Mike Butler. Story next three pages.

Quality of Life

By Chuck Lane
Green Bay Packer Director of Public Relations

During the mid-1960's when the war for college talent was being waged between the National and American Football Leagues, the NFL published what was known as "The NFL and You." It was a magazine type volume devoted to characterizing the then 12 NFL franchise cities and what opportunities each had to offer.

But since the merger of the Leagues, the Dallas Cowboys were the only NFL team to actively pursue college talent via this form of publication . . . that is until 1976-77 when Bart Starr foresaw a need to actively recruit new talent to play for Green Bay.

At a time when the collegiate draft was in legal jeopardy, Starr decided to take an active stance in the recruitment of college players. Then, as the draft was retained, and a need to pursue more free agents became a reality (due to the draft being limited to 12 rounds per team, rather than 17 as had previously been the case) the brochure/publication concept remained in the Packer game plan.

At first, the concept was for a three-page, twice folded, four-color brochure. Initial design called for a declaration of the present, past, and the community, but as ideas began to flow, the three page concept gave way to eight, 12 and eventually 16 pages, and even at that, there are areas of the Packer story which admittedly receive but the barest description.

But how do you tell a love story - a tale of deep commitment - between a community and its team in 16 pages? Some teams' histories are limited to a few years, but the Packers' is a half century of uninterrupted love. Capsulizing that emotion taxes 16 pages, but an attempt was created, and the results well received.

If there is a theme to the Packer entry in the recruiting brochure field, it is "Quality of Life". Long before our time, the Indian people felt, "more is less", and in stating positive thoughts of the Green Bay area, the theme of safety, convenience, and minimum of problems becomes repetitive.

But, to begin with, the basic concept of marketing anything begins with a belief in your product. Anyone associated with the Packers who has been involved in Wisconsin and the atmosphere of Packer football has enough material for written volumes, but this statement is not restricted to only the events of game day.

Following the basic introductory information on the staff ("Quality people working together in a positive atmosphere") and team history, areas are devoted to more specific topics of interest to prospective personnel.

With pride in past eras and past contributors one section is devoted to "An Opportunity to Succeed: What Team Members of the 60's Are Doing." What follows is one of the most unique success stories in modern sports. (See list at end of story)

These are covers of brochures NFL used to fight AFL for players in early 1960's.

And as a follow-up, there are two pages of testimonials of what living and playing in Green Bay has meant to players past and present. Past greats like Don Hutson, Tony Canadeo, Paul Hornung, Lionel Aldridge, Willie Davis, Gary Knafelc and Bob Skoronski tell of their convictions about their careers here, the fans, the communities of Green Bay and Milwaukee and their business opportunities afforded by a career with the Packers. Also Lynn Dickey and Johnnie Gray speak from the standpoint of the present day player.

Additional positive voices are heard pictorially, as a two-page, all-color spread is devoted to the scenic and recreational advantages of the area, ranging from Door County to the Lake and Bay, to the upland and migratory game birds and the fishing, to the golf courses and ski areas which make recreation and tourism Wisconsin's second leading industry.

The Packer physical resources were not as temporarily descriptive due to the spring/summer renovation and expansion, but points of pride were illustrated in the form of Lambeau Field and Milwaukee County Stadiums, whose natural grass fields and fan proximity (in Green Bay, no seat is more than 248 feet from the playing surface) are the League's finest; the summer facilities at St. Norbert; the Nautilus weight training equipment; and the Packers' corporate headquarters and locker/training facilities.

In an attempt to be as informative as possible, community advantages such as safety, shopping proximity, convenience, housing, hospitals and medical facililties, recreation, parks and playgrounds, schools, and similar information is made available.

The back cover contains a full-color shot of the Packer locker room, fully adorned with game dress uniforms in the lockers and a color picture of the 1961, 1962, 1965, 1966 and 1967 NFL Championship watch and rings, with the simple caption, "it pays to win".

A closing description, again in pictures, deals with the tremendous fan support the team has enjoyed in the half century romance with the community, followed by a letter from Bart Starr telling prospective rookies what a playing and coaching career in Green Bay has meant to him and his family.

Willie Davis, a star at defensive end for the Packers in the championship 1960's, was a guest coach for a couple of weeks in Green Bay in 1976.

In short, the new marketing effort is a compact, 16 page statement of positive assertive description of the advantages of playing and working for the Packers in a community where "quality of life is more than a dream - a bayside reality". Hopefully, somewhere in the nation, a future Willie Wood or Johnnie Gray will be looking for an NFL city to showcase his talents and while looking through some coffee table publications will find the oldest NFL franchise still operating in its original city an interesting and rewarding place to establish his career. It has to young men since 1921 and it is a story which makes the Green Bay Packers a legend.

And here's what some members of the famed teams in the 1960's are doing today:

Carroll Dale - Operator of Strip Mining Company, Wise, Va.

Boyd Dowler - QB and receivers coach, Cincinnati Bengals.

Bob Long - General managing partner, Pizza Huts, Elm Grove, Wis.

The 1977 Draft

If you take stock in such things . . . here's a good omen:

The Packers received two first round choices in the 1977 draft for the first time since 1972, and that was a Division championship year. The Packers then took Willie Buchanon and Jerry Tagge (the second No. 1 pick coming in payment in the Kevin Hardy Trade with San Diego).

The 1977 draft was shortened from 17 to 12 rounds, with the 28 teams selecting 335 players (one less to Houston for a violation). Here are the Pack's draft choices and the figures in parens designate the order of selection among the 335 players chosen:

1st Round - Mike Butler, DE, Kansas (9).

1st - Ezra Johnson, DE, Morris Brown, choice from Oakland for Ted Hendricks (28).

2nd - Greg Coch, G-T, Arkansas (39).

3rd - Choice (66) to Houston for Lynn Dickey.

3rd - Rick Scribner, G, Idaho State, choice from Denver for Bill Bain (74).

3rd - Terdell Middleton, HB, Memphis State, choice from St. Louis for Perry Smith (80).

4th - Choice (94) to Pittsburgh for Bob Barber.

5th - Nate Simpson, RB, Tennessee State (122).

6th - Tim Moresco, DB, Syracuse (149).

7th - Derrel Gofourth, C, Oklahoma State, choice from New York Giants for Joe Danelo (172).

7th - Rell Tipton, G, Baylor (176).

8th - David Whitehurst, QB, Furman (206).

9th - Joel Mullins, T, Arkansas State (233).

10th - Jimmy Culbreath, FB, Oklahoma (260).

11th - Terry Randolph, DB, American International (290).

12th - Choice (317) to Oakland for Ollie Smith.

How Packers Were Built

Here, at a glance, is how the Packers were built and it's obvious that the college player draft has been the main source of talent, with 26 players being selected since 1968. However, Coach Bart Starr has dipped heavily into the free agent and trade market in his first two seasons, signing 12 free agents and trading for three players. In addition, 10 of his draft choices have made the team. All of these players, of course, have been challenged by the 1977 crop of draftees and free agents.

Year	Draft (26)	Trades (6)	Free Agents (12)
1968 6-7-1 3rd, Central	LB Fred Carr (No. 1) T Dick Himes (No. 3)

The 1976 Story ... In Statistics

It's amazing how Fred Carr, the Packer's veteran all-pro linebacker, can leap. Here he towers over the line and waits to block a field goal kick by Fred Cox of the Vikings in Milwaukee Dec. 5. This is one of two FG attempts he blocked in this game and he had six for the 1976 season. Coming in at the left below ball is Steve Wagner. No. 28 is Willie Buchanon. Carr stands 6-5 and says the penetration of the Packer line, anchored by Mike McCoy (in middle) is a major factor in blocking a kick.

TV And The Super Bowl

Chances are good that you, as a reader of the Packer Yearbook and a professional football fan, were watching via television Super Bowl XI between the Oakland Raiders and Minnesota Vikings from Pasadena, Calif., Jan. 9, 1977.

Thus, you were one of 81,900,000 viewers who watched the spectacle in the United States and helped establish an all-time record audience for a televised sporting event.

The previous record was the 75,930,000 who watched the seventh (night) game of the 1975 World Series between the Boston Red Sox and Cincinnati Reds.

Super Bowl XI, witnessed by a record in-the-flesh crowd of 103,424 fans, also was televised to millions in Mexico, Canada, Brazil, Venezuela, Japan, South Korea, England, West Germany, the Bahamas, Bermuda and Puerto Rico.

Oakland's 32-14 victory, telecast by NBC, reached 31,610,000 television homes in the U.S. on 224 stations to snap the previous rating of 29,440,000 for Super Bowl X from Miami, telecast by CBS.

A single network has televised each Super Bowl except for Super Bowl I between Green Bay and Kansas City in Los Angeles. This inaugural was TV'd by CBS and NBC. CBS had an estimated 39,250,000 viewers and NBC 38,210,000. All ratings for the Super Bowls were compiled by the A. C. Nielsen Co.

The Super Bowl, of course, has become the NFL's showcase event and television has magnified the impact of the grand championship game.

This contest is the prime goal of all 28 teams in the NFL but only 10 different teams played in the 11 Super Bowls. Minnesota holds the record for most Super Bowl appearances, 4, while Dallas and Miami each played in three. Green Bay, Kansas City, Baltimore, Oakland, Pittsburgh were in 2 each and Washington and the New York Jets each made it once.

The Packers, Dolphins and Steelers hold the record for consecutive Super Bowl wins, 2 each.

Green Bay still ranks as the highest scoring Super Bowl team, scoring 68 points in a 35-10 win over the Chiefs and a 33-14 victory over the Raiders. Green Bay was the only Super Bowl team to exceed 30 points until the Raiders scored 32 on the Vikings.

Minnesota has been the major mystery in Super Bowl history thus far. Coach Bud Grant's teams gained the finals in 1970, 1974, 1975 and 1977 and managed to lose all four games, scoring a total of 34 points (7, 7, 6 and 14) while giving up 95 — an average of 23.7.

All sorts of theories have been advanced for the Vikings' Super Bowl problems and one most commonly mentioned is that Minnesota plays in the defensive-minded Central Division, sometimes called the Black and Blue Division, which includes Green Bay, Detroit and the Chicago Bears.

Minnesota has won its Division title repeatedly with hard-nosed defensive football, rarely exploding offensively. The feeling is that the Super Bowl winner is usually the team that can score best. Teams getting to the Super Bowl must have a staunch defense . . . thus, the winning difference is generally in scoring.

The Packers' Super Bowl victories climaxed their dominance of the NFL in the 1960s. They've had a shot since — in 1972 when they gained the playoffs with a 10-4 record, only to lose to Washington 16-3, in the first round. The Redskins made it to Super Bowl VII but lost to the Dolphins 14-7.

Packers Open In Superdome

The National Football League rarely stretches its schedule.

Thus, the switch from a 14-game to a 16-game card in 1978 is a remarkable change in the long history of the league.

The 14-game program has been in force for 17 seasons - since 1961 when it was enlarged from the 12-game schedule that had been used for 14 years, from 1947 through 1960.

The league played an 11-game schedule in 1946 and that was a one-game increase from the 10-game cards during the late World War II years, 1943-45. An 11-game schedule was played from 1937 through 1942. Before '37, the teams played anywhere from 10 to 13 games.

The 1978 season will start Sunday, Sept. 3, which is 15 days earlier than 1977 when the campaign opens Sept. 18. The pre-season schedule will be reduced to four games from six.

Besides the longer schedule, the NFL will come up with a system to reduce the inequities in the strength of schedules that popped up too often in the past.

NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle calls the scheduling plan adopted last winter by the 28 club presidents "the new face for '78." The schedule will be balanced, so to speak. The Packers, for example, will play home-and-home games with the four opponents in the Central Division, which will include Tampa Bay in '78. The Packers' other opponents will depend somewhat on how they finish in 1977, which means that they'll play teams that closed out with percentages or places similar to the Pack's finish.

In another change, 10 teams instead of the usual eight will compete in the playoffs. The six divisional winners will earn playoff spots and a week's rest while on Sunday, Dec. 24, 1978, the four teams with the two next best won-lost records in each conference will play off for the right to enter the round of eight with the divisional winners on the following weekend. After that, the playoffs will proceed as in the past right up to the Super Bowl.

But back to '77 . . . The Packers will play four teams which finished with a better than .700 won-lost percentage - Minnesota (.821), Cincinnati (.714), Los Angeles (.750) and Washington (.714). The Vikings and Rams reached the playoffs and Minnesota went all the way to the Super Bowl.

All Packer schedules are murder, of course, but the '77 card doesn't call for consecutive doses of playoff opponents as it did the past two years.

The Packers open in the Superdome against the New Orleans Saints and then return home to the meet the Houston Oilers. The Saints posted 4-10 last year, the Oilers 5-9, same as Green Bay.

After that modest start, the Packers dive into a couple of contenders - the Vikings at Minnesota and the Bengals in Milwaukee. Then comes a bit of variety - Lions, Buccaneers, Bears and Chiefs, before three straight .700 teams - the Rams, Redskins and Vikings again. The Bays closeout against the Lions, Bears and 49ers.

After a year's absence, the Packers draw a Monday night date in '77. They visit Washington Monday night, Nov. 21 in what could be a key game for both teams.

If the Packers can contend for the Central Division championships, three of the last four games will be crucial. After Washington, the Packers meet the Vikings, Lions and Bears.

The 49ers, who helped the Packers open their 1976 season, are at the opposite end this year, closing out the campaign in Milwaukee Dec. 18. And this points up something of a scheduling oddity. Normally, the Packer-49er game would be played in San Francisco since the NFL tries to alternate the game from city to city.

LOVE AT FIRST FLIGHT.

If you like the idea of a great-ridin', power-packin', right-priced snow machine, the Arctic Cat Jag will steal your heart. But not your bank account.

It's the tough kid brother of the Arctic Cat El Tigre. When you pull the trigger on the hammer, Jag lets you know it. Choose either the Spirit free-air series 2000 or 3000 engine, both with Mikuni carburetion. Double cylinders punch power to the two-thirds cleated track with a wide 15 inches worth of sno-grippin' go power.

And Jag wouldn't be Jag without Arctic's innovative torsion slide rail suspension. Shocks on the skis and skid frame help control the ride. And the skis lead your merry way, putting curbs on the corners with their 28 inch stance.

Maybe best of all is the way Jag responds. You move. It moves. Shift your weight into the corner and the corner disappears.

One ride and you'll know. Jag. It's love at first flight.

Good times are comin' on the Cat
